THE LOST MILLION

By Winthrop Alden

Winthrop Alden is not his real name, by the way. It's a little disguise of a well-known author who wants to see how well his story will sell without his name. Property worth a million dollars, if lost, will not easily be forgotten. Starting with this basic truth, the story of "The Lost Million" follows the adventurous romance of a beautiful young girl who is heiress to the lost million, if it can be found; a big, ardent, quick-witted and two-fisted young man who stumbles upon a clue to its discovery; and a disagreeable gentleman who wants the million, wants to know where it is, and, as the possessor of a very ominous and deadly agent—new, by the way, in current fiction—makes himself a very unpleasant obstacle to the discovery of the missing wealth and to the true happiness of the two young people.

SELLING SCHEME UPON APPLICATION TO THE PUBLISHERS

COME RACK! COME ROPE!

By Robert Hugh Benson

Author of "Lord of the World," etc.

Taking the reign of Elizabeth as his time, and the persecution of the Catholics as his theme, Father Benson has written a story of the love and devotion and wonderful courage of Robin Audrey, a young country squire; of his playmate, Thomas Babington, not unknown in history for his efforts in behalf of Mary, Queen of Scots; and others. There is drama in plenty in this vigorous tale, not omitting that most exciting of all stories, which never fails to thrill, the game of hide and seek when a man is running and hiding for his life.

The Isle of Life

By STEPHEN FRENCH WHITMAN

It represents Ghirlaine Bellamy, stolen from her fiance, by a man she dreads, looking seaward from the wild island off Sicily. There he holds her prisoner; intends, if he cannot win her love, to lose herself, only with his life. The story advances with a rush; a deserted villa becomes a fort; the captor—a man of massive character, at first repellent, always fascinating—its defender.

This romance will arrest attention: its appeal goes far beyond the ordinary novel reading public.

It is for sale everywhere.

NEW NOVELS

A Novelist Who Has Arrived

LANCHESTER of BRAZENOSE

By Ronald MacDonald

Raymond Lanchester is a modern knight of chivalry who, in loyalty to an unfaithful wife and for love of his little son, takes upon his own shoulders the burden of another's crime. "Divvy-Di," a young actress friend, comes to his rescue and, by some clever amateur detective work, brings to light a writer of anonymous letters who is spreading misery far and wide. The story ends with a reconciliation of friends long parted and the well-earned happiness of Lanchester and "Divvy-Di."

John Lane's Latest Discovery

TOPHAM'S FOLLY

By George Stevenson

Here is a novelist new indeed, not only in the sense that this is his first book, but new in that he gives the reader an entirely fresh outlook on familiar things. The narrative in its leisurely grace resembles Trollope; Mr. Hardy might have written some of the passages describing country life and country people; but for sheer brilliance of style and exquisite characterization it is impossible to think of another author who could have written "Topham's Folly."

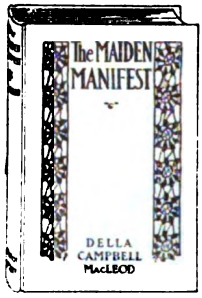
THE DAY OF DAYS

By Louis Joseph Vance

Mr. Vance's new story has all the qualities which made "The Brass Bowl," "The Black Bag," etc., the popular successes that they were—absorbing mystery, startling adventure, rapid action, and irrepressible humor.

The title is taken from Knoblauch's play, Kismet, whose whimsical concept of Oriental fatalism assigns to each and every man his Day of Days wherein he shall range the skies and plumb the abyss of his destiny, alternately lord and puppet.



In twentieth century New York Mr. Vance's hero, P. Sybarite, has his Day of Days—and the action of the story takes place within a period of twelve hours!

THE MAIDEN MANIFEST

By Della Campbell MacLeod

The story of an impressionable young man's quest for an ideal girl. The love story that is unfolded has piquancy and freshness, and is finely and delicately developed against a Southern background which none but a Southerner could have depicted.

☛ To lovers of "Molly-Make-Believe," and to all lovers, married or single, young or old, we heartily recommend this very out-of-the-ordinary love story.

RICHARD PRYCE

His reception on both sides of the water

"A writer with a gift for satire, a sense of humor, and a smooth mastery of the technique of the modern novel, a capital analyst, also, of character, and, last but not least, an Englishman as thoroughly at home in the English country house and among its denizens as Mr. Galsworthy himself."—New York Tribune.

"Mr. Pryce's work recalls the style of Octave Feuillet by its clearness, conciseness, and brilliancy of touch. He is realistic in the true sense, and has steeped himself in the subtle charm of London, which he reproduces rather than describes.—London Athenaeum.

JEZEBEL is a glorious compelling character, a young English girl, whose name leads her into unusual situations, but who finally takes her place in the circle to which she was born.

ELEMENTARY JANE is a charming idyll against a vivid and effective background of music-hall and lodging-house life in the poorer quarters of London. (Ready February 15th)

THE BURDEN OF A WOMAN is a powerful story in which a woman of strength and gentleness, bravely enduring her own trouble, teaches fine moral distinctions to the man who loves her. A happy ending closes the years of pain and questioning.

THE FIXED PRICE PROBLEM WIDER THAN THE BOOK TRADE.

IT is becoming more and more evident that the so-called "Macy case," which so vitally concerns the book trade, is but one phase of a problem which is troubling almost every department of retailing, a problem whose solution is being sought in a dozen or more separate cases of litigation. Originating under slightly variant forms, in a half dozen different parts of the country, and before a dozen different courts, they are gradually focusing upon the Supreme Court of the United States for definite and definitive adjudication. It is probable that within the next twelvemonth a body of final precedent will be laid down, delimiting exactly the legal status of fixed prices, and, hence, of an importance to manufacturers, dealers and public alike that cannot easily be overestimated.

The "Macy case" is the only one concerning itself with copyright law; all the others involve patent right. The two rights are so clearly analogous, however, that it is generally expected that any decisions handed down will be likewise analogous.

If we may credit Washington reports, no fear is entertained of the Oldfield bill passing during the present session of Congress. Patent revision is considered certain, however, to come up later, and it will probably contain provisions prohibiting the maintenance by combinations of net prices on patented articles. Whether the present Oldfield bill attempts to prohibit net-price maintenance by individual proprietors of patents is not entirely clear. The best patent authorities have not hesitated to say, however, that in their belief such a law, so far, at least, as patented or copyrighted articles were concerned, would be, if enacted, immediately attacked in the courts as unconstitutional—and probably successfully. Inasmuch as judicial interpretation of practically this same point of constitutional law will be shortly forthcoming in other form, the opponents of net prices have deemed it advisable to wait such interpretation.

To certain of the net-price suits now in process or already adjudicated, namely, the Sanatogen case,* the so-called "Bathtub Trust" case,† the O'Donnell Drug Store case,‡ the PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY has already given full notice. Details of some later developments in net-price litigation are given in a clear digest, which we summarize elsewhere in this number from a recent issue of Printers' Ink. That the situation at present may be clear to members of the book trade who have not earlier reports immediately available, the bearing of these various suits may be very briefly stated.

The Kellogg Corn Flake Company's product is not patented. In an endeavor to gain the protection of the patent law in holding their net-price regulations legal, they patented the pasteboard container of their flakes. The government claims this patent void for lack of novelty. The court may so declare, depriving the Kellogg Company of the legal right to fix prices under the patent monopoly. This would not mean, necessarily, however, that a firm like the Gillette safety razor people, granted that they had a valid patent, would be so restrained. The Gillette company figures in several pending suits.

To many people, the "Dick Company" and "Bathtub Trust" decisions seem directly at variance; but they involved entirely different points of law. In the first case, the court decided that the individual owner of a valid patent had a perfect right to dispose of his invention under such terms as he saw fit, even if those terms, in the oft-quoted phrase, "restrained trade." In the second case, the court decided that, though a patentee could license the use of his invention to a number of manufacturers, those same manufacturers could not use their license of a common patent as a cloak to cover their joint endeavor to fix prices and "force dealers to maintain them." In other words, in the second case the court found "a combination in restraint of trade," a violation of the Sherman anti-trust law, against which the claimed protection of the patent law was no defense.

ONE of the most interesting contributions to the discussion which followed Mr. Nye's paper last week in the Booksellers' League series of trade lectures, came from a representative of the local Wanamaker store and related to the "book knowledge" club of the clerks there. It seems that it is a Wanamaker book department custom for the salespeople to meet every Friday night for a half-hour immediately after closing and listen to a little talk on books of a given type or subject by one of the staff who is particularly "up" therein. One week the talk may be on books on psychology, the next "rag books": one recent topic was "cook books"; another "Kipling"—clearly ample diversification. The talks, indeed the whole organization of the club itself—which is entirely in the hands of the employees—are very informal. Questions are freely asked and answered—the whole idea being to make the sales force in as brief a time as possible more familiar with certain definite parts of their stock. The idea is a good one; it has proved in practice very successful. We understand the same scheme, in more or less modified form, is carried on by Lauriat's in Boston, by McCauley Bros. in Detroit, by J. K. Gill Company, Portland, Ore., and probably by other booksellers. The PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY would be glad to serve as a clearing house for information and suggestion along any similar lines.

A NEW NET PRICE CASE BEFORE SUPREME COURT.

"SANATOGEN" CASE ORIGINATED IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA—REVIEW OF NET PRICE CASES TO DATE.

THE latest development in the anti-net price campaign, says the Washington correspondent of Printers' Ink, is the carrying to the United States Supreme Court of the question of price-maintenance as involved in the "Sanatogen" price-cutting case, which case has attracted no little attention from manufacturers and advertisers during the time it has been in the lower courts. The specific question put up to the nation's highest tribunal for decision is whether there is to be construed as infringement of patent the action of a price-cutting druggist in retailing at less than the price fixed (as per warning notice) original packages of Sanatogen purchased of jobbers.

HISTORY OF THE "SANATOGEN" CASE.

The gist of this Sanatogen case to date cannot be more clearly and concisely summarized than in the words of the certificate which the members of the Court of Appeals have just filed with the Federal Supreme Court. The document certifies that the record in the pending case discloses the following: "Bauer & Cie of Berlin, Germany, co-partners, being the assignees of letters patent of the United States dated April 5, 1898, covering a certain water soluble albumenoid known as 'Sanatogen' and the process of manufacturing the same, about July, 1907, entered into an agreement with F. W. Hehmeyer, doing business in the City of New York under the trade name of the Bauer Chemical Company, whereby Hehmeyer became and has since been the sole agent and licensee for the sale of said product in the United States, the agreement contemplating that Hehmeyer should have power to fix the price of sale to wholesalers or distributors and to retailers and to the public.

"Since April, 1910, the product has been uniformly sold and supplied to the trade, and to the public by the appellants and their licensees in sealed packages bearing the name 'Sanatogen,' the words 'Patented in the U. S. A. No. 601,995,' and the following:

NOTICE TO THE RETAILER

This size package of Sanatogen is licensed by us for sale and use at a price not less than one dollar ($1). Any sale in violation of this condition or use when so sold will constitute an infringement of our patent No. 601,995 under which Sanatogen is manufactured, and all persons so selling or using packages or contents will be liable to injunction and damages.

A purchase is an acceptance of this condition. All rights revert to the undersigned in the event of violation.

THE BAUER CHEMICAL CO.

"The appellee is the proprietor of a retail drug store at 904 F Street, N. W., in this city (Washington, D. C.). He purchased of the Bauer Chemical Company for his retail trade original packages of said Sanatogen bearing the aforesaid notice. These packages he sold at retail at less than one dollar, and, persisting in such sales, appellants in March, 1911, severed relations with him. Thereupon appellee without the license or consent of the appellants purchased from jobbers within the District of Columbia, said jobbers having purchased from appellants, original packages of said product bearing the aforesaid notice, sold said packages at retail at less than the price fixed in said notice, and avers that he will continue such sales.

"The Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia further certifies that the following question of law arises upon the record, that its decision is necessary to the proper disposition of the cause, and to the end that a correct result may be reached desires the instruction of the Supreme Court of the United States upon that question, to wit.: Did the acts of the appellee in retailing at less than the price fixed in said notice original packages of Sanatogen purchased of jobbers as aforesaid constitute infringement of appellant's patient?"

SAME PRICE-CUTTER IN A SAFETY RAZOR SUIT.

How soon the court of last resort may be expected to pass upon this question is problematical, but it will not be in the very near future. In the meantime, there is virtually held up, pending the decision, another similar case in which this same price-cutting druggist, James O'Donnell, is being prosecuted for patent infringement in retailing the Gillette Safety Razor at less than the price stipulated by the manufacturer. In the Gillette case the same (lower) court that gave O'Donnell his first victory in the Sanatogen case has refused to issue an injunction to put a stop to the sale at cut price, and it is said that the druggist has, since the legal fight was started, sold $5 Gillette sets at $4.19. Incidentally current gossip in Washington has a rumor that the present Chief Justice of the United States was one of the purchasers of these cut-price razors, so that if that case ever goes to the Supreme Court it may not be passed upon by a full bench.

ARGUMENTS FOR NET PRICES.

The attorney representing the cut-rate druggist in the Sanatogen case has made a very elaborate presentation of the case for his client. He takes as his text for this the question, "When does the patentee's right to dictate the resale price of his patented article terminate?" In his estimation, there was, prior to the year 1896, no apparent difficulty in answering this question. The lawyer who was consulted on the subject felt safe, up to that time, he declares, in advising his client on the faith of repeated pronouncements by the United States Supreme Court, that when a patentee or his assignee, had manufactured and sold for a satisfactory price the machine or other article protected by the patent that machine or article was therefore "without the patent monopoly," and beyond control of the patentee to dictate its resale price. This view of the situation which is said to have prevailed prior to 1896 is alleged to have been based upon the findings of the Supreme Court in the cases of Adams vs. Burke; Morgan Envelope Company vs. Albany Paper Company; and Keeler vs. Standard Folding Bed Company.

LEGALITY OF NET PRICES IN A "CLOUD OF DOUBT"?

It was the decision in the famous case of the Heaton Peninsular Button Fastener Company that this attorney holds responsible for spreading over this broad question "a cloud of doubt through which at the present day the vision of neither layman nor lawyer can safely penetrate." It was not, however, what the button fastener case decided, but the general language used by the court in that instance that is held responsible. This was followed by the decision in the Dick-Henry mimeograph case, and the attorney says: "Undeniably the result of the decision is to extend the lawful monopoly of a patent to unpatented and unpatentable articles."

Space will not permit quoting this latest discussion of the mimeograph case except as to one point which is latterly being magnified by all the interests assailing price maintenance. In the present instance the attorney says: "It was most unfortunate that a decision so far-reaching in its effect should have been actually decided by a minority of the Supreme Court. The case was argued after the death of Justice Harlan, and during the absence of Justice Day. The opinion of the Court was delivered by Justice Lurton with whom Justice McKenna, Justice Holmes and Justice Van Devanter concurred; a vehement dissenting opinion was delivered by Chief Justice White with whom Justice Hughes and Justice Lamar concurred. After the opinion was delivered the plaintiff in error (Henry) asked leave to file a petition for rehearing and the Attorney-General and the Solicitor-General filed an application and brief on behalf of the United States for leave to intervene and for a rehearing of the cause, these public officials taking this extraordinary action because of the wide public interest and the grave effect of its decision. Both applications for rehearing were denied. Under a rule of the United States Supreme Court a rehearing of a case which has been decided cannot be granted unless one of the justices who concurred in the majority opinion requests the rehearing. Thus we have presented a case of the gravest importance in which the law of the land, for the time being at least, has been settled by a minority of the court of last resort."

This latest contribution to the very interesting array of legal documents bearing upon enforced price maintenance incidentally discloses the fact that since the decision in the button fastener case, above mentioned, the inferior Federal courts throughout the country have in a total of more than twenty-five price restriction cases issued injunctions restraining dealers from price-cutting.

ARGUMENTS OF THE PRICE-CUTTER.

The meat of the argument as concerns the present Sanatogen case found in the brief filed by the attorney for the price-cutting druggist is as follows: "It was utterly impossible for plaintiffs to sell a package of the patented article to O'Donnell, and reserve to themselves the right to sell that package to any one else at any price. The argument is that a patentee, after having manufactured his patented device, after having sold that device at whatever price he chose, can, under his statutory patent right retain in himself the right to sell that particular article—that concrete embodiment of the patented invention—at some other or different price than that named in the label on the article.

"Or, to phrase it somewhat differently, the argument is that the patentee may part with the title to the concrete embodiment of the patented invention, receiving therefor the full price demanded for it, retaining no right to make any further profit out of it by virtue of the manner in which it is used or sold, but that under his patent, by means of the label affixed to the article, he licenses the purchaser of that article to sell that particular article at not less than the given price, retaining in himself the right to sell, not other embodiments of the patented invention at a different price, but to sell that particular embodiment of the invention at a different price. This argument cannot be sound, and it is only resorted to in an attempt to apply the inapplicable doctrine of Dick vs. Henry to the wholly different situation presented by the price restriction cases."

This line of argument has been provoked, of course, by that feature of the manufacturers' price maintenance system whereby, while upholding a specified retail price, the manufacturer reserves to himself the right to sell the same goods at a less price to the jobber or middleman. This is perhaps the first case in which such stress has been laid on this point of attack—the practice of the manufacturer to grant concessions below the placarded price to the jobber and, for that matter, indirectly to the retailer also.

"THE NECESSITY OF FIXED PRICES IN NATIONAL SELLING."

In the same issue of Printers' Ink, Waldemar Kaempffert, managing editor of the Scientific American, has something to say concerning the "Necessity of Fixed Prices in National Selling," which is equally pertinent.

Thus far, he says, the courts have interpreted the patent laws in the broadest spirit and have recognized the absolute property right of the inventor in his invention.

Every patentee derives his right to state how his machine shall be used and at what price it shall be sold from no less an instrument than the Constitution of the United States. "The Congress shall have power . . . to promote the progress of science and useful arts by securing for limited times to authors and inventors the exclusive right to their respective writings and discoveries" states the Constitution. In accordance with the power vested in it by the Constitution, Congress has passed laws which fix the life of a patent at seventeen years and which give to the inventor or those who hold under him the exclusive right to make, use, and sell the invention patented.

Time and time again the courts have held that the word "exclusive" means exactly what intelligent men think it means; in other words, that an inventor may exclude all others from making, selling and using his patented invention and that he may do with his invention what he pleases. Hence any law which states that he may not fix the price at which his patented article may be sold or stipulate the place or manner of its use does not give him the "exclusive" right to which he is constitutionally entitled.

CROWN CORK & SEAL COMPANY CASE.

The capping machines by which the crimped, sheet-metal stoppers of beer and soda-water bottles are applied are protected by patents owned by the Crown Cork & Seal Company, of Baltimore. They are leased on the condition they "shall be used only in connection with crown corks purchased by the lessee directly from the lessor." That condition has been upheld in suits brought by the Crown Cork & Seal Company for infringement of its patents on the machine.

Naturally those companies who are selling caps protest that their business is curtailed. The answer to that is: The Crown Cork & Seal Company have developed remarkably efficient machinery for sealing bottles, without which corks would be useless. Those who protest have either invented nothing in the way of a machine or have produced nothing that can compare with the Crown Cork & Seal Company's devices. Why should anyone be permitted to fatten on a business created by a company that has perfected at great expense a wonderful machine that has vastly simplified and cheapened the corking of bottles?

Similar restrictions are placed even upon apparatus that finds its way into the household. Thus, every Pianola bears the following notice:

> This Pianola, No. ....., is manufactured under patents owned and controlled by the Aeolian Company and is sold by us and licensed to be used under such patents and under our guarantee, only with attachments, improvements, and music rolls, especially designed and manufactured by us for use therewith. It must not be used with spurious imitations of any of our attachments or with rolls not of our manufacture; otherwise the guarantee and license terminate. We guarantee the instrument to be of our standard workmanship and material and we will repair or replace any part found defective in material or workmanship during the period of one year from the date of sale by us.

THE HISTORY OF LICENSE RESTRICTIONS AND OF PRICE-FIXING.

It was not until 1896 that the right of an inventor to dictate the kind of material that might be used with a patented machine was squarely upheld. In a case that has since passed into legal history as the "Button Fastener Case" the modern practice of selling a patented machine with the license restriction that it may be used only with certain unpatented supplies furnished by the patentee was judicially approved. On the bench sat Judge Taft, now President of the United States. The decision was written by Judge Lurton, who is now Justice Lurton of the United States Supreme Court and one of the bench that decided in favor of Dick in the mimeograph case.

The patented machine involved was a device for fastening buttons on shoes by means of "an ordinary metallic staple." Of these machines 40,000 had been sold, labelled thus:

> This machine is sold and purchased to use only with fasteners made by the Peninsular Novelty Company, to whom the title to said machine reverts upon violation of this contract of sale.

The court held that the patentee had not parted with the machine absolutely, that he had reserved to himself alone the right to use fasteners of any kind, and that anyone who had knowledge of the license restriction could be regarded as a contributory infringer. Taking a sensible business man's view of the situation, the court also stated that by purchasing fasteners from the patentee the user was simply paying royalties.

NOTICE OF LICENSE RESTRICTION ESSENTIAL.

Notice of the license restriction is essential. Some years after the button fastener case was decided, the makers of the Neostyle lost a suit against a defendant who was not aware of a license restriction that forbade the use of stencil sheets and ink not supplied by the manufacturer of the patented machine. Ever since license restrictions have been brought home to those most likely to be affected by making them only a little less conspicuous than the "scare-heads" of a yellow journal.

The right of a patentee to fix the retail selling price of his patented product was first tested by "The Fair" of Chicago in a suit for patent infringement brought in 1903 by the Victor Talking Machine Company. On all Victor machines the following notice appeared:

NOTICE.—This machine, which is registered on our books No. ———, is licensed by us for sale and use only when sold to the public at a price not less than $..... No license is granted to use this machine at a less price. Any sale or use of this machine when sold in violation of this condition will be considered as an infringement of our United States patents under which this machine and records used in connection therewith are constructed, and all parties so selling or using this machine contrary to the terms of this license will be treated as infringers of said patents, and will render themselves liable to suit and damages. This license is good only so long as this label and the above noted registered number remain on the machine, and erasures or removal of this label will be construed as a violation of the license. A purchase is an acceptance of these conditions. All rights revert to the undersigned in the event of any violation.

VICTOR TALKING MACHINE COMPANY.

To attract customers "The Fair" had adopted the usual department store policy of placing on the bargain counter a well-advertised patented article as a "leader." The machines had been bought from a jobber. A United States Court of Appeals decided that, if the owner of a button fastener patent could stipulate that only he should have the right to sell supplies to his licensees, a Victor Talking Machine Company might properly prevent the selling of its talking machines below the fixed price.

QUEBEC LIFTS PULP AND PAPER TAXES.

JULES ALLARD, acting Premier, on February 2 announced that all restrictions on Crown lands in Quebec will be removed, and all paper mills there will be enabled by this order to secure free entry of their products into the United States under Section 2 of the Canadian reciprocity act.

When the United States attached Section 2 as a rider to the Canadian reciprocity act it was aimed at securing this action. The United States had placed a countervailing duty, amounting to the export charge, on the products from restricted lands until such time as Canada freed her lands from these taxes. The province of Ontario first conceded, and paper mills in Ontario have been sending in thousands of tons of paper under this advantage. About a month ago an order-in-council was announced, which granted to four paper mills in Quebec the right to use Crown lands wood without any restrictions, but this was considered by the United States an inadequate subterfuge, and no remission of taxes had been ordered. The present order-in-council probably clears up the whole situation.

"CUMULATIVE BIBLIOGRAPHY—A BRIEF HISTORY."

CUMULATIVE BIBLIOGRAPHY, now such an indispensable device is, as we are reminded in a little illustrated pamphlet just issued by the H. W. Wilson Company, of Minneapolis, a comparatively recent development. As a matter of fact the whole range of publications of the H. W. Wilson Company, now the principal publishers of cumulated periodicals, had their beginning in a small book business started in 1880 by two undergraduates at the University of Minnesota, who started on a total capital of $100, and that partly borrowed.

Morris & Wilson, the original firm, had to carry morning papers the first year, since the proper development of the new project required the use of all profits. But the college authorities encouraged them to the extent of allowing them for the conduct of their business a nine-by-twelve room in a basement and there, by skilful manipulation of their schedules of recitations, one or the other partner was always behind the counter. When Mr. Morris graduated, Mr. Wilson assumed full charge, and before long had a flourishing bookstore to keep pace with the growth of the university. As his business grew, he began to feel the need of more convenient trade tools, and in 1898 he started the publication of a monthly cumulative catalog of books, estimating the cost at $500 a year, and hoping for five hundred subscribers at one dollar each. He and his wife did all the work of compiling, copy making, proofreading, mailing and bookkeeping at home, after business hours. The first number, issued in February, 1898, brought in about twenty-five subscribers, and the year's deficit was large. (The publisher states in this connection by the way that the present price of $6 for the Cumulative Book-Index is still inadequate, owing to the continual addition of material expensive improvements.)

After a short time the publishing department moved to the bookstore from the publisher's home, and then to a separate little office of its own. An elaborate system to insure accuracy has been consistently built up since that time, and the editorial force of trained workers augmented until it now numbers twenty. The Reader's Guide to Periodical Literature, based on the Cumulative Index to Periodicals, published by the Cleveland Public Library, was begun in 1901 when the second edition of the United States Catalog was brought down to date. That same year the firm was incorporated. The Reader's

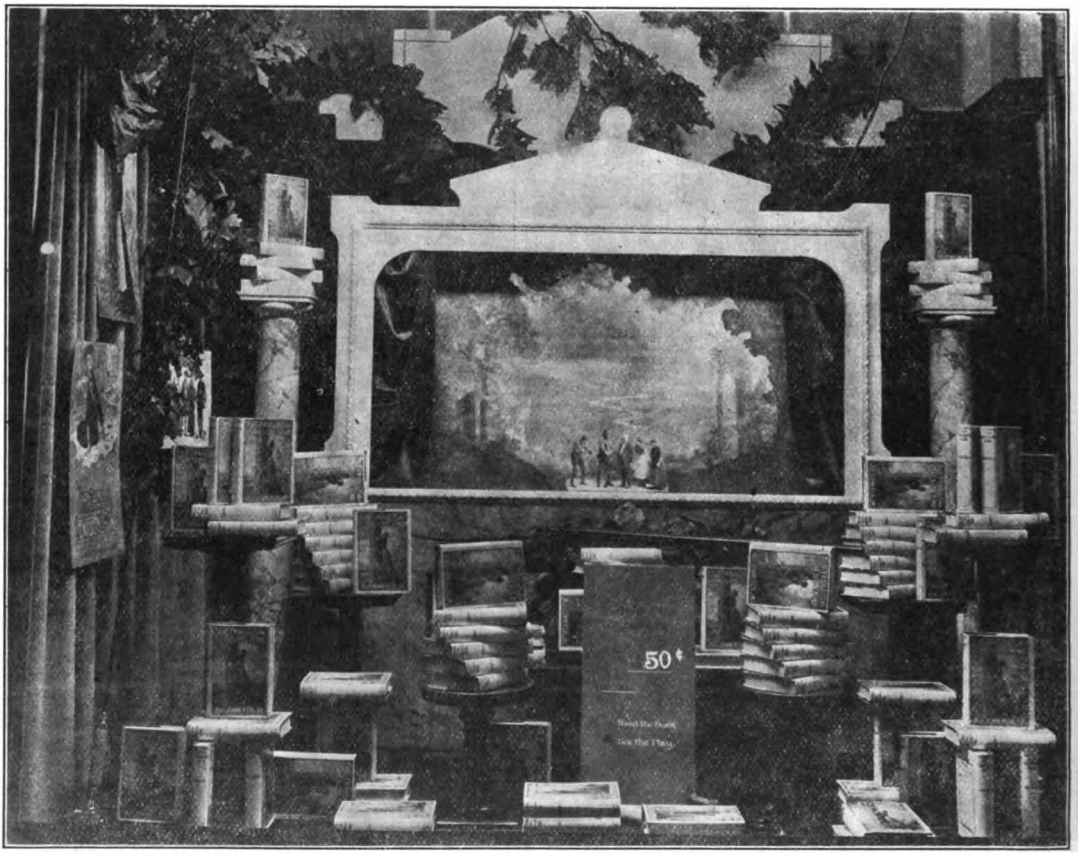
Guide now indexes about one hundred magazines, and includes analytical entries for books of a composite character. The Book Review Digest, a guide to the purchase of current books, was started about the same time.

In 1906 again, after moving into a large, fireproof building opposite the university, several new publications were added—a four-year supplement to the United States Catalog, Library Work (now incorporated in the Library Journal), and a series of Debaters' Handbooks. Not content with these, the firm announces several more projects for the future—a bi-monthly Reader's Guide Supplement, an index to technical magazines, an index and digest of current educational literature, etc.



The detailed description given in the little pamphlet of the Wilson building and of the editorial methods used, from the first reading to the final proof corrections, shows an extraordinary amount of care and system, while the house lunch room and picnic pictures are indications of the good feeling and co-operation of the staff.

POSTMASTER-GENERAL RECOMMENDS REDUCTION OF BOOK RATE.

POSTMASTER-GENERAL HITCHCOCK'S annual report, made public February 2, definitely recommends the reduction of the present "unjustly high" rate of postage on books by advocating the consolidation of third and fourth-class matter. At present, the postage charges for these two clases of mail bear no fixed ratio to each other. For certain weights and zones, the parcel post rates are lower than the third-class rates, while in other cases they are higher.

"This condition," it is pointed out in the report, "is likely to result in much confusion, and should not exist. Packages containing books or catalogues do not differ in any essential particular from other parcels, and they should be handled by parcel post. Prior to the enactment of the parcel post law, the department urged that these two classes of mail be consolidated, and the recommendation of such action is now renewed."

The report further tentatively suggests the reduction of some parcel post rates and increasing the limit of weight beyond eleven pounds; recommends civil pensions for postal employees; an increase in rates on second-class mail, which may pave the way for one-cent-letter postage; and points out that during the present administration expense of operating the postal service has been cut down $45,000,000.

The establishing of postal savings banks at Presidential post offices was completed early in the fiscal year ended June 30, 1912. There are now 12,812 postal savings banks at which patrons may open accounts. The number of depositors is approximately 300,000, and the deposits aggregate about $28,000,000, not including $1,314,140 withdrawn and invested in postal savings bonds.

On the basis of the present monthly net increase of deposits, it is estimated that the gross income of the postal savings system for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1912, will amount to $700,000, and the interest payable to depositors to $300,000. The income of the system for the fiscal year will meet the interest payments and the total expenses of the central office, but will be approximately $275,000 less than enough to cover the entire expense of the service.

However, the Postmaster-General's report says: "It is expected that when the deposits have increased to $50,000,000, which, at the present rate, they will do soon, the system will be self-sustaining."

Of the parcel post he says: "While the postage rates for the new parcel post system range considerably lower than corresponding express charges, it is believed that experience will show them to be higher in some instances than is necessary in order to maintain the service at cost. Likewise, the restriction that places an eleven-pound limit on the weight of parcels mailed should be regarded as merely tentative."

The report directs attention to the approval of the commission, headed by Associate Justice Hughes, of the United States Supreme Court, of the Post Office Department's recommendation that the postage rate on second-class mail be increased from 1 cent to 2 cents a pound. In the opinion of the Postmaster-General, favorable action by Congress on the report of the commission would be a step toward the proper adjustment of postal charges.

"There is a widespread popular interest," the report says, "in the plan to lower the postage charge on letters from 2 cents to 1 cent an ounce. The proposed increase in the second-class rate would pave the way for this change, making it possible to reduce the first-class rate without departing from the present policy of a self-supporting postal service."

During the fiscal year 1912, more than 300,000,000 pieces of mail, having an aggregate weight of about 61,000,000 pounds, were carried free through the mails under the franks of Congressmen and of various government establishments. Had postage at the ordinary rates been paid on this matter, the revenues of the department would have been increased by more than $20,000,000. Postmaster-General Hitchcock declares that "it is manifestly unfair to give the Post Office Department no credit in the government's fiscal accounts for the expense of performing this service. The department, therefore, renews its recommendations that the practice of franking be discontinued, and that legislative authority be granted for the use on official mail of special stamps to be furnished by the Post Office Department on the requisition of those entitled to them."

In connection with the establishment of the parcel post, Mr. Hitchcock recommends that legislation be enacted looking to the readjustment of the payments to railroads for the transportation of mail. He points out that many of the roads will be entitled to increased compensation on account of the increased volume of mail. He renews his recommendation that payments to railroads carrying the mails shall be made on a car-space basis and the cost to the roads of the mail transportation.

The report recommends that "civil pensions, based on length of service," should be granted by the government to postal employees when they become superannuated. It is likely that the expense of such a system would be more than offset by gains in efficiency.

PARCEL POST DEFECTS.

THE New York Board of Trade and Transportation has called attention to three serious defects in the parcel post law.

The distance rates are so high that it is possible for foreign merchants to distribute samples cheaper than local dealers, the International Parcel Post rates being lower than the local United States rates.

It has been pointed out to the Postmaster that samples of merchandise weighing, for example, four ounces, can be mailed from Germany or other foreign territory to any point in the United States for a less charge than samples of the same weight can be mailed under the present zone parcel post law from New York to Jersey City. In one special instance, it is related that within the first month of operation of the new parcel post a large mercantile house in this city, which mails on an average 20,000 samples annually, made up a large number of samples here and affixed German postage stamps to each. The entire lot was packed into cases and shipped to Germany, where they were unpacked and sent over to various destinations in this country through the mails and under the rates on samples prescribed by the International Postal agreement. It is asserted that, notwithstanding the extra freight costs and packing and unpacking labor involved, the whole shipment was delivered at various points in the United States for less than would have been possible under the domestic parcel post rate on samples for the distances covered.

The prohibition against bottles of liquids over twelve ounces in weight is a serious one to the drug trade, since the standard-size bottle for most medicines is sixteen ounces.

Digitized by Google

The third point was the extremely rigid interpretation of the law which prohibits the enclosure of invoices in shipments. This had caused emphatic protest in many quarters, but, by order of the Post Office Department, this week, that prohibition is now removed.

CANADIAN NOTES.

(Special Correspondence to The Publishers' Weekly.)

THOMAS NELSON & SONS TO HAVE A RESIDENT AGENT IN CANADA.

TORONTO.—Mr. S. B. Watson, who has been coming to Canada on annual spring trips for Thomas Nelson & Sons, will take up his residence permanently in this country and will open an office in Toronto. It is understood that as yet the company will not carry stock here, but this may be a future development. There is only one other British firm in the same position, Ward, Lock & Company, who have been represented here for several years by Mr. B. A. Clark. Other houses are practically all represented by Canadian firms, with the exception of Cassell & Co., the Oxford University Press, and latterly J. M. Dent & Sons, all of whom have their own branches.

A SUIT INVOLVING DEFINITION OF "DATE OF PUBLICATION."

TORONTO.—Information has been received from Winnipeg that a lawsuit of interest to publishers has just been tried in one of the provincial courts. It seems that the Canada Law Book Company of Toronto were offered by Butterworth & Co., the British law book publishers, the sale in Canada of Halsbury's "Laws of England," a work to appear in twenty-four volumes, and they were to have the exclusive control of the market for five years from the date of publication of the first volume of the set. The Canada Law Book Company replied that they would accept the proposition, but stipulated five years from publication, meaning thereby complete publication. Butterworth cabled acceptance and the Canada Law Book Company proceeded to make arrangements for the sale of the work.

In course of a week or so a letter was received from Butterworth & Company, confirming the telegram, but again stating that the arrangement was to extend for only five years from the date of publication of the first volume. The Canada Law Book Company ignored this letter and held the cablegram as the agreement.

Butterworth & Company recently opened a branch in Winnipeg and, the five years from date of publication of the first volume having expired, proceeded to sell Halsbury's "Laws" on their own account. The Canada Law Book Company promptly moved to restrain them from entering the market. Argument was heard last week in Winnipeg, but judgment has not yet been rendered. The point at issue was what constituted date of publication. The prosecution argued that it was the date of publication of the last volume of the set. The defence tried to show however that they considered it to mean the date of publication of the first volume.

NEW CANADIAN BOOKS THIS SEASON.

TORONTO.—Those who know anything of publishing conditions in Canada are aware that the number of purely Canadian books produced during a single season is very small indeed. Canadians look for their literary provender to the United States or England, and share with both countries in the heritage of English literature. Owing to sparseness of population, for one thing, and a scarcity of authors of repute, for another, first publication in Canada is a most precarious undertaking. However, there are a few Canadian books, and with the increase in the number of Canadian publishing houses who have publishing arrangements with the London publishers, the number will increase.

The first important book of the season is the Hon. James Young's "Public Men and Public Life in Canada," a work of historical interest, in two volumes. It is published by William Briggs, and gives a very fair idea of the political history of the country during the past sixty years.

The same publisher will publish this spring another book of a somewhat similar character, being the reminiscences of the Hon. Sir George W. Ross, once Premier of Ontario, but now leader of the opposition in the Dominion Senate.

"Canada's Sea Power" is the title of a work of immediate interest on a much-discussed subject, which has just been published by McClelland & Goodchild. It has been written by a prominent Canadian, who writes under the assumed name of Christopher West.

Bell & Cockburn announce, in conjunction with a British publisher, "Quebec, the Laurentian Province," by Beccles Willson, who has already written a somewhat similar work on the province of Nova Scotia. The same house will bring out later in the year a history of the counties of Ontario by Emily P. Weaver.

The Canadian branch of J. M. Dent & Sons will produce two Canadian books this spring. The first is a light novel by William Banks, Jr., entitled "William Adolphus Turnpike"; the second a volume of collected verse by Virna Sheard, a well-known Canadian writer.

The Musson Book Company are preparing to bring out two novels by young Canadians. One of these is "The Blue Wolf," a tale of the West, by W. Lacey Amy; and the other, "Empery," a story of Rupert's Land, by S. A. White.

The Canadian office of Cassell & Co. has one Canadian novel on its list, "Candlelight Days," by Adeline M. Teskey, a story of pioneer days in old Ontario.

NEW BUILDINGS FOR CANADIAN PUBLISHERS.

TORONTO.—A start will be made this spring on the erection of the big new warehouse and printing plant of the Methodist Book and Publishing Company. An excellent site has been secured on the corner of Queen, John and Richmond streets, within half a mile of the center of the city, and here it is proposed to erect a building that will have the distinction of being the largest religious publishing house in the world. The committee having in charge arrangements for the undertaking will have a million dollars at their disposal by the time the present property on Richmond Street is disposed of, and with this sum something very fine can be accomplished.

The Rev. J. J. Redditt, assistant book steward, has recently returned from a tour of American cities where he has looked into the latest ideas in construction and equipment.

The Methodist Book and Publishing Company have up to recent years been almost the sole publishers of purely Canadian books. Under the imprint of William Briggs they have brought out nearly all the important volumes of history, biography and poetry that have been produced in this country. In addition to this they have had the contract for all the Ontario Government printing for the past few years and this work, with the printing of a long list of periodicals, renders their office one of the most important in the country.

The Copp, Clark Company have proceeded with the erection of their new office and warehouse building at the corner of Portland and Wellington Streets with such expedition that they are now ready to move their stock from the old warehouse on Front Street. The offices will be transferred in March. The new building, while located at a considerable distance from the centre of the city, will relieve the congestion under which the firm has been laboring for some time past. They have been able to erect a very handsome structure which will take care of their business for some years to come.

It is also expected that McLeod & Allen will proceed with the construction of their proposed new building this year. This company, who are well known in the United States, have been located at 42 Adelaide Street West for several years, where they have sublet sections of their building to Cassell & Co. and McClelland & Goodchild. Their new building is to be erected near the corner of King and Spadina where they will be in the immediate neighborhood of the three large warehouses of W. J. Gage & Company, Warwick Bros. & Rutter and the Copp, Clark Company. They will probably make arrangements for the subletting of their new building to tenants in the book and stationery lines.

Mention might also be made of the completion of the neat little building on Victoria Street for Bell & Cockburn, the new Canadian publishing house, who are making a splendid start according to all accounts. They have been occupying the ground floor of the building for some time but the finishing touches have only just been completed, giving them one of the neatest and most attractive offices in the city .

William Tyrrell & Company, the King Street booksellers, who also do a little publishing from time to time, will shortly move into a new building which has just been erected for them near the corner of King and Church Streets. This building, to be known as the Tyrrell Building, has a number of suites of offices on the upper floors which will be let to tenants.

These various activities in the building line are indicative of the expansion of the book trade in Canada.

PROGRESS IN PROCESS ENGRAVING IN 1912.

THE SUPERSESSION OF HALF-TONE.

It was not to be supposed, says the English Stationery Trades Journal in a review of process engraving development in 1912, that the process block—we mean the product of the half-tone process—would permanently retain the almost pre-eminent place it has attained in the production of illustrative printing. A retrospect extending over the forty years which cover the history of process work shows that there is no finality in this field, and a newer and better process is inevitably the outcome of an older one. The defects and disadvantages of the latter reveal themselves as further progress is made, and in striving to overcome them it is often found that the desired result can be better attained by a radical departure from the existing method. Thus in the case of the half-tone block it was found that the drawback has been the necessity of careful printing with expensive machinery, using art paper and relatively costly ink. Further, it was found that an increase of strength and tone value could only be attained by duplex printing, necessitating still greater cost of production. This deficiency of the half-tone process is due to the fact that the half-tone block can only carry a uniform layer of ink, the light and shade and tone value being obtained by the varying size of the dots produced by the action of the screen.

THE DECADENCE OF COLLOTYPE.

Comparing the method of printing with that of collotype and photogravure it was seen that these latter processes owed their richness of effect to the fact that the amount of ink carried on the printing surface was proportioned to the strength of light and shade effect in the picture, and thus approximated more closely to the practice of the painter in laying on his colors more or less thickly in the different parts of the picture in order to get the depths of light and shade. Photogravure was for a time put on one side by reason of the slowness of the printing method, though the superiority of the results were admitted, and for some years a strong effort was made to commercialize the collotype process. Power machinery was brought into requisition for printing, and for a time it seemed as though the process had a great future. It was found, however, that the results were uncertain, fluctuating with atmospheric conditions. Financially, collotype proved a disastrous speculation, and one by one firms which had started out to work the process on a large scale dropped out of the running, until at the present time the number of firms working the process in this country [England] may be counted on the fingers of one hand. The failure of the process may not have been due entirely to atmospheric difficulties. It was also, no doubt, due to keen Continental competition, and to the difficulty of securing skilled workmen. In Germany the process still flourishes, and is apparently profitable. The supposition is that climatic conditions are there more favorable and the qualifications and temperament of the workmen are better. Apart from this, visitors to Continental collotype establishments have noted that far better physical conditions prevail. Premises have been built suitable for the work, careful attention being paid to cleanliness, ventilation, warming, lighting, &c. English firms too often endeavored to start and run their collotype businesses with inadequate capital, which prevented them from securing the ideal conditions attained by their Continental neighbors.

THE RENAISSANCE OF PHOTOGRAVURE.

The failure of the collotype process led to attention being again turned in the direction of photogravure. Several attempts were made to construct power printing presses performing the inking and wiping operations mechanically. These attempts were unsuccessful, and it was not until Karl Klic, a Viennese artist, conceived the idea of rotary printing from engraved copper rollers, according to the method employed by calico printers and wall paper printers, that success was attained. Financed by Messrs. Storey, of Lancaster, the well-known firm of textile printers, Klic was enabled to complete his experiments, and the Rembrandt Intaglio Printing Company was founded, some ten or twelve years ago. This firm has turned out a vast amount of excellent work by this process, and down to within two or three years ago had no rivalry. Their success, however, led others to attempt to discover the secret of their method, and in the past year especially there has been quite half-a-dozen firms turning out good commercial work of a similar character, whilst the Illustrated London News are producing weekly supplements by this method. The results are so vastly superior to half-tone that there are many who predict that this process will largely supersede half-tone for many purposes. The advantages are considerable from every point of view. The cost of producing the engraving is not much more than for the highest class of half-tone, nor the speed of producing it much slower, but the chief gain is in the printing. The expense of make-ready—a very considerable item in half-tone printing—is saved, the paper used may range from the commonest news paper to the highest qualities of supercalendered stock, or if need be the thick, rough papers used for plate printing may be employed. The ink is comparatively cheap, and there is no expense of constant renewals of composition rollers to face. But above all, the speed of printing is vastly greater than on letterpress machines. A speed of 5,000 impressions per hour is readily attainable, and it is possible that this may be exceeded. There are no atmospheric conditions to study, and the results can be kept uniform. The machinery employed is, moreover, comparatively simple and does not require the number of hands per machine which have to be employed in letterpress work. It is not surprising therefore that those who are concerned in the development of this process should look with the utmost confidence towards a great future for it. Maybe it will not have the effect some expect of lessening the amount of work which now goes to the half-tone block maker. A new field may probably be created, and in any case the increasing demand for illustrations may leave the half-tone worker just as fully employed as ever.

THE INSUFFICIENCY OF THE OFFSET PROCESS.

Another rival to the half-tone block is the offset process, though the results so far have not shown such a conclusive advance as in the case of the rotary printed photogravure. It is quite certain that offset work can never approach the results of the photogravure method, nor can they ever excel the best letterpress printed half-tones, especially in art catalogue work, but there may be a special field in which the offset process will find scope. The process especially excels in rendering soft grey effects on matt papers, and delicate tints in color work, in both cases with an absence of mechanical grain effects. It is also effective in printing line work, a department in which photogravure so far has relatively failed. Further, it is capable of printing high light half-tone work, with much more delicacy than can be secured with the half-tone block. These points in its favor seem to indicate its field. It will be possible to print delicate high light vignettes along with fine line borders and lettering, and also to apply delicate colored tints to the same. For photo-lithographic line work such as maps, plans, engineer's drawings, reproduction of old books and the like, the process is admirable, and here the photo-processes will work hand in hand with it.

THE THREATENED POSITION OF COLOR WORK.

So far such new developments as machine printed photogravure and offset printing have not seriously affected color printing from half-tone blocks, but it is by no means certain that this immunity will continue. The Rembrandt Intaglio Company have shown some excellent results in color from gravure, and the Vandyke Company of New York have for some time past been doing excellent color work on a commercial scale by the intaglio method. There are no doubt considerable difficulties in the way—chiefly difficulties of securing register—but these will no doubt be gradually overcome. If they can be, then the photogravure method will be a powerful rival to the three color block process, and its results will no doubt be preferred by artists, by reason of the soft blending of colors, together with the rich shadows and delicate half tints with pure high lights which are obtained. Detail is not rendered so crisply as in the half-tone block, and thus for commercial catalogue work the latter may still retain its position. As regards process color work by offset printing too little has yet been done to form an opinion, but so far as experience goes it would seem that the difficulty is one of securing sufficient depth of color to give an accurate reproduction of the original, and the difficulties of registering also enter into the question as in the case of photogravure. So far the three color block method has thus escaped serious competition, and it seems likely that it will retain its hold for a few years to come. One cannot but feel, however, that little advancement has been made —nothing more in fact—than is due to the skilful handling that comes from constant practice. The work has been quite commercially organized in many firms, and there is now little uncertainty in obtaining results. Where so little progress has been made is in the direction of overcoming the obvious defects of the process, arising from the insufficiency of the color filters and plates in the photographic process, and in remedying the inadequacy of the inks. Much hand work has therefore to be resorted to on the blocks, and the printing is difficult and often uncertain in its results. It is surprising that the effects obtained are so good considering these circumstances. It may be added that a little band of experimenters in various countries are constantly at work on the photographic side of the color process, and are constantly evolving new apparatus and new methods. The results of the autochrome and similar processes are extremely beautiful as glass transparencies, but so far no adequate method of applying them to paper has been found. The work in this direction is, however, calculated to influence the half-tone color process, and perhaps bring about fresh accomplishments.

THE NEW SAUNDERS BUILDING IN PHILADELPHIA.

W. B. Saunders Company have just moved into their new, seven-story building on West Washington Square, Philadelphia. Twenty-four years ago the Saunders imprint appeared on a medical book for the first time.

The Saunders business saw its birth at 33 South Tenth Street, where only the first floor was occupied, with a scant 1000 square feet of floor space. This their business quickly outgrew, so that the next year (1889) they were forced to seek larger quarters, and moved to 913 Walnut Street, where their floor space was trebled. The increased facilities that their manufacture and distribution required necessitated their removal, four years later (1893) to 925 Walnut Street.

Their new building faces Washington Square, is of modern fireproof construction, and is said to be the largest and best-equipped plant in existence devoted exclusively to the publication of medical books. The entire building is devoted to their own use, giving them a floor space of over 30,000 square feet. Everything is up to date—sprinkler system, vacuum cleaner, private filter and lighting plants, built-in vaults, and a roof garden.

On the first floor are the executive offices, and in the rear the shipping department, with a separate entrance and wagonway on Locust Street. On the second floor are located the treasurer's, bookkeeping, subscription, trade and college text-book departments and general business offices. On the third floor are located the offices of publication, the advertising department and art studios. The fourth floor is taken up entirely with the stock of bound books. The fifth floor is the sheet and paper stockroom. The sixth and seventh floors are pressrooms.

TRADE ASSOCIATIONS.

PITTSBURGH BOOKSELLERS' AND STATIONERS' ASSOCIATION.

The Pittsburgh Booksellers' and Stationers' Association held their annual banquet at the Fort Pitt Hotel on Tuesday evening, January 28.

The president, A. W. McCloy, made the address of welcome. He was followed by James Conlin; "Uncle George" Olney, dean of the stationery traveling fraternity, who had made a thousand-mile trip to attend the dinner; Hon. John M. Goehring, president of the Pittsburgh Councils; Dr. A. A. Hammerschlag, director of the Carnegie Technical School, who spoke of the old-time guilds formed for purposes similar to those of the Stationers' Association; and William D. Bevin, who talked of blank book manufacturing.

A vote of thanks was tendered the Houghton Mifflin Company for their generous donation of guest copies of "Cease Firing."

Much regret was expressed at the absence of ex-President Charles H. Langbein, by reason of dangerous illness.

POSTAL MATTERS.

BOOKS TO GET NEWSPAPER RATE?

SENATOR BOURNE, chairman of the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, will, it is understood, recommend that books and other printed matter be admitted to the mails at the same rate as newspapers sent by individuals. viz., a cent for four ounces.

ANOTHER move to admit books to the parcel post was made by Senator Hoke Smith, Wednesday, in the form of an amendment to the Post Office appropriation bill.

OBITUARY NOTES.

A. R. RAPPAPORT, who had been with the Penn Publishing Company of Philadelphia since the founding of the firm, died of heart failure January 31, in Philadelphia. He had not been in good health for several years, and last May was taken ill at Galveston, Texas, and was obliged to discontinue his trip and come all the way home. At different times since then he was in the office, but was unable to do any hard or long-continued work.

Mr. Rappaport was widely known in the trade, especially in the South and among the smaller towns of the West, where he had traveled extensively for a number of years. His death is the first among the members of the Philadelphia Booksellers' Association.

ANNE WARNER FRENCH, novelist, writer of short stories and essayist, died, February 1, in the south of England. She was born in St. Paul, Minn., October 14, 1869, was educated at home, and married in St. Paul in 1888 to Charles Ellis French. Her first work, "A Woman's Will," appeared in 1904, and in the same year she published "Susan Clegg and Her Friend, Mrs. Lathrop." In 1905 she completed "The Rejuvenation of Aunt Mary," later dramatized. The Susan Clegg stories were continued in "Susan Clegg and Her Neighbor's Affairs," 1906, and "Susan Clegg and a Man in the House" in 1907; "Seeing France with Uncle John," 1906, was followed by "Seeing England with Uncle John," 1907. Other publications of Mrs. French's are: "Seeing England," 1908; "An Original Gentleman," 1908; "In a Mysterious Way," 1909; and "Your Child and Mine," 1909.

PERIODICAL NOTES.

THE new name of Every Woman's Magazine is Housefolks, and the George H. Currier Company has resumed its publication.

RUSSELL B. KINGMAN, who for several years was manager for the Style Book, is now advertising manager of Dress, New York.

THE George H. Currier Company has sold Farm Life to A. C. Taylor, publisher of The Agricultural Epitomist.

A SPECIAL meeting of the stockholders of the Curtis Publishing Co., which publishes the Saturday Evening Post, the Ladies' Home Journal, the Country Gentleman, and recently purchased the Philadelphia Public Ledger, has been called for March 18 to vote on a proposed increase in the capital stock from $10,000,000 to $20,000,000.

ON the first of Feruary the New York Times moved its operating department into a new building, the Times Annex, on the north side of 43d Street just around the corner from Times Square. The building has eleven floors above the street and a press room and sub-basement below the surface. The plant is entirely up-to-date—panic-proof doors to fire escapes and a benzine room outside the building are among the many innovations.

PERSONAL NOTES.

STEWART EDWARD WHITE, leading a distinguished nine, among whom was Winston Churchill, broke his leg last week, just as he made a spectacular slide to the home plate in a contest with a boys' school team in Santa Barbara, Cal.

MISS JEANETTE L. GILDER is at the Manhattan Eye and Ear Hospital, recovering from an operation on the back of her right eye. The operation was performed Wednesday, January 29, by Doctor Louis A. Coffin, and Miss Gilder is convalescing rapidly.

JOHN A. HOLDEN, business manager of the office of the PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY, who had planned to sail February 8 on the SS. Parima of the Quebec Line for a five weeks' trip to the West Indies and the Isthmus, has been obliged to postpone his trip on account of sickness.

LITERARY AND TRADE NOTES.

LONGMANS, GREEN & Co. are bringing out: "Drake's "The Wondrous Passion" and Sir Rider Haggard's Zulu romance, "Child of Storm."

THE MACMILLAN COMPANY have ready the series of "Lectures on the American Civil War" delivered before the University of Oxford in Easter and Trinity terms, 1912, by James Ford Rhodes.

"WILD JUSTICE," by Frances Clare, a novel of love and marriage, and "The Silver Dress," the romance of a young Englishwoman, by Mrs. George Norman, are among the most recent Duffield publications.

CASSELL & Co. are announcing the anonymous publication of a new novel by a hitherto best selling author, who writes of royalty, also traveling incognito. The title is "Princess Mary's Locked Book."

A NEW detective story, "The Maxwell Mystery," by Carolyn Wells is to be published by J. B. Lippincott in February. Her own Sherlock, Fleming Stone by name, reappears and solves the mystery of a murder at a house party.

DEAN WILBERFORCE, the famous London prelate, has spoken of "My Little Sister," by Elizabeth Robins, in two of his recent sermons—once in St. John's Church, Westminster, and again from the pulpit of Westminster Abbey.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS publish to-day a new volume of essays by Arthur Christopher Benson, "Along the Road." The title is sufficient indication that it contains the same sort of leisurely comment that one expects from that pleasant essayist.

"THE INFANCY OF ANIMALS," by W. P. Pycraft, and published by Henry Holt & Co., contains an enormous amount of information about young animals, compactly and readably told by a British naturalist. The illustrations are many and of unusual interest.

"THE ISLE OF LIFE," by Stephen French Whitman (Charles Scribner's Sons), has a plot that rivals melodrama for action and novelty. The heroine is kept prisoner upon a wild island off Sicily, and all kinds of adventure and romance develop from the situation.

RICHARD PRYCE, whose "Christopher" was found so charming in this country last year, is sending us through Houghton Mifflin Company three novels hitherto unknown on this side—"Elementary Jane," "Jezebel" and "The Burden of a Woman." They are all stories of English life.

DOUBLEDAY, PAGE & Co. will publish this spring a book by J. C. Snaith, the young English author, whose work recently has been attracting a tremendous amount of interest. Mr. Snaith's book is understood to deal seriously with industrial and political conditions in Great Britain.

DANA ESTES & Co. boldly characterize "The Fine Air of Morning," by J. S. Fletcher, as a pastoral romance, though it is also said to be breezy and picturesque and full of the spirit of the open. Laura E. Richards' "Miss Jimmy" has had its second printing before publication.

MORRIS SCHAFF'S notable articles on "The Sunset of the Confederacy" are now published in book form by Luce & Co., of Boston. The book is a study of the last months of the war, with personal memories and illuminating description, helped by maps. The style is readable and straightforward.

"SEVEN KEYS TO BALDPATE," by Earl Derr Biggers, just published by the Bobbs-Merrill Co., is the story of seven seekers after solitude who one by one establish themselves in a deserted summer hotel in the dead of winter. The illustrations, by Frank Snapp, are of unusual vigor and cleverness.

"THE Banner with the New Device; Woman's Place in Nature, in Civilization and in Government," by William W. Hicks is to be published by The Sanctuary Publishing Co., of Boston, on February 12. Apparently the maiden no longer cries "Stay!" but has adopted a banner of her own.

THE title of Louis Joseph Vance's new novel, "Day of Days," is taken from Knoblauch's play "Kismet," whose whimsical concept of Oriental fatalism assigns to each and every man his Day of Days wherein he shall range the skies and plumb the abyss of his destiny, alternately lord and puppet. In twentieth century New York a young man has his Day of Days, when in twelve short hours he has enough experiences to fill a book.

THE new firm of F. G. Browne & Company report that their first two books, "The Lapse of Enoch Wentworth" by Mrs. Curtis, and "Pilgrims of the Plains" by Mrs. Aplington, have each sold out second editions before publication and have gone into a third. This is a pretty good record for the first productions of a new firm. Mrs. Aplington's story is concerned with the Santa Fe Trail, and a Topeka dealer placed a first order for it of a thousand copies.

THE bookstore in the United States probably selling the most Spanish books is not in New York or San Francisco, but in San Antonio, Tex., where H. A. Moos has built up a large special business. His stock of Spanish books is a well-known source of supply for old legends and traditions of Mexico, while the general stock of rare and out-of-print books, of about 25,000 volumes, is kept alive by the purchase of some $150,000 worth of second-hand books annually.

"THE VAN EYCKS AND THEIR ART," by W. H. James Weale, with the co-operation of Maurice Brockwell, is an abridged and revised edition of a large book on "Hubert and John van Eyck," which John Lane Company published in 1908. The text has been compressed in some places and extended in others, while certain emendations have been made and the plan of the book has been materially recast, thus rendering it of greater assistance to the student. There are numerous illustrations, and the volume is in a form to be easily handled as a book of reference.

"THE NINE-TENTHS," James Oppenheim's novel of metropolitan life, has many incidents which might almost have been taken from the present strike of the white-garment workers in New York City. Girl strikers are arrested for picketing, and, as has lately actually occurred, denounced the police for unnecessarily harsh treatment. Mr. Oppenheim, according to Brand Whitlock, is one of our writers who possess "the city sense." His latest novel, "The Olympian," published by Harper Bros., has the sub-title of "A Tale of the City"; and in its pages the personality of New York seems almost personified.

A FRANK admission of a mistake has just been made through a circular issued by Frederick A. Stokes Company containing sixteen pages of a recent novel entitled "The Bride's Hero." The cover of this booklet contains in large type the words, "A Good Book with a Bad Title." It is said that the book has received much praise and has sold fairly well, but the booksellers have been unreserved in expressing their opinions of the title, with the result that the publishers now acknowledge the mistake, although it is too late to correct it. But they insist that the book is a good one in spite of its title.

"THE PRIVATE LIFE OF HENRY MAITLAND," by Morley Roberts, published by George H. Doran Company, is now known to be the life of George Gissing—told frankly and without reserve by his most intimate friend. No one had the courage to proclaim him the great man that he was until ten years after he had died. Since his death there has been an increasing tendency to mention him with praise as realistic, pessimistic and classic. Now, when the time is ripe, comes Mr. Roberts' book, explaining with sympathy, yet with unimpassioned statement the secret why and how of Gissing's life. He does so without a shred of reserve, revealing the inward facts in almost startling nakedness.

L. C. PAGE & Co. announce the following new books for publication during February: "The Harbor Master," an adventure romance, with a Newfoundland setting, by Theodore Goodridge Roberts; "The Career of Dr. Weaver," a purposeful story, which deals with the responsibilities and problems in the medical profession of the present day, by Mrs. Henry Backus; "Pollyanna," a new novel, by Eleanor H. Porter, author of the popular "Miss Billy" books; "The What-Shall-I-Do Girl," which will appeal directly to the young girl who must adopt for herself a salary-earning career, by Isabel Woodman Waitt; and for juvenile readers, "Our Little Roman Cousin of Long Ago," by Julia Darrow Cowles, the initial volume in a new series to be called the Little Cousins of Long Ago Series, "which will be a companion series to the established Little Cousin Series."

BUSINESS NOTES.

BAY CITY, TEX.—Kathryn M. Gillette is now sole proprietor of the Bay City Book Store, having purchased the interest of Nannie McGehee recently.

BELTON, TEX.—W. S. Hunter & Co. have succeeded Hunter & Freeman, jewelry, books and drugs.

BLOOMINGTON, IND.—The stock of the City Book Store was damaged by water as a result of a fire in the building in which the store is located.

CALISTOGA, CAL.—Peter Hopkins, bookseller and stationer, has moved into larger quarters in the Rutherford Building.

CANTON, ILL.—The firm of A. L. Owings & Co. has been dissolved, Frank White & Brother succeeding. The company carried a large line of drugs, stationery and books.

CHADRON, NEBR.—J. F. Lawrence has sold the book store to T. E. Phillips.

NEVADA, MO.—The George R. Voss Book Store has just been opened. A full line of stationery will be carried.

NEW YORK CITY.—E. P. Dutton & Co. will open their new retail store, at 681 Fifth Avenue, between 53d and 54th streets, early in the spring. In addition to the lines of books and stationery they have always carried, they will add a new department of French books and magazines.

PASADENA, CAL.—C. W. Williams has opened a new and attractive book and stationery store here, called the Book Nook. He would be pleased to receive catalogues and price lists.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.— Clarence W. Smith, 44 East Avenue, has added a line of commercial stationery to his book and stationery business.

VISITING BUYERS—NEW YORK CITY.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING FEB. 5, 1913.

Miss McEvoy, representing Stewart D. G. Co., Louisville, Ky.
Mr. Rhea, representing W. A. McNaughton & Co., Muncie, Ind.
Mr. Glass, representing M. O'Neil & Co., Akron, O.
Mr. Wolfenstein, representing Leopold Adler Co., Savannah, Ga.
Miss Valentine, representing Rike Kumber Co., Dayton, O.

"BOOKS, WHISKEY, POISON, EXPLOSIVES."

THE New York Evening Journal recently had an editorial headed "Classing Books with Whiskey."

You observed the other day that a live opossum was sent through the mail, in the new parcel post.

All sorts of queer things have gone through the mail. But queerer than all the things that the mail has carried; much queerer than the opossum, which pretends to be dead when it isn't, which carries its little ones on its back with their tiny tails wrapped around its big tail; much queerer than anything we have heard of in some time, is the Government regulation which forbids sending books via the parcel post.

You musn't send a bottle of whiskey, a cap of dynamite or a book through Uncle Sam's express system.

Is that not interesting and amusing? Isn't it typical of modern conditions and intelligence to find books, which certainly ought to be considered desirable in a republic, classed with whiskey, poisons, ill-smelling products and high explosives, and not allowed to go through the parcel post.

In order to make sure that books and knowledge will not be distributed carelessly and freely in this Republic, books are actually excepted from the parcel post system.

AUCTION SALES.

FEBRUARY 10, 11 AND 13, 2:30 AND 8:15 P.M. The library of Mrs. L. D. Alexander, of New Canaan, Conn.; eleven lots of books from the Robert Hoe collection that were unclaimed are added; also thirteen lots from other collections and some of the Hoe bookcases. (No. 987; 1074 lots.)—Anderson.

FEBRUARY 14 AND 15, 2:30 AND 8 P.M.; 10:30 A.M. AND 2:30 P.M. Valuable collection of autographs gathered by the late John Mills Hale, Esq., of Phillipsburg, Centre Co., Pa. (No. 1078; 1736 lots.)—Freeman-Henkels.

"Alden, Winthrop," pseud. The lost million. N. Y., Dodd, Mead. c. 378 p. D. $1.25 n.

Book is said to be by a well-known author, who has written it under a nom de plume to prove that a story can be popular even if author's real name is unknown to the public. Young Kemball, returning from a trip in South America, befriends an elderly man who is taken ill on board ship. On arriving in New York the man dies, first making the young man burn up a fortune in banknotes, and giving him a letter to deliver under strange circumstances, and a mysterious Egyptian bronze sealed cylinder to keep for some months and then give to the first person demanding it on a certain day. From these ingredients a tale of adventure and thrills is evolved, whose mystery is only solved at the very end, and which keeps the reader breathlessly following its developments.

Pryce, R: The burden of a woman. Bost., Houghton Mifflin. 301 p. D. $1.35 n.

To the little Welsh farming village of Maen Gorsedd came Mary Redwing some eight or ten years before the story opens. She lives with her little daughter, quietly, industriously, happily. Then Peter Davidson comes into her life. Peter is a well-to-do farmer, who loves her and wants to marry her. When she tells him she was never married to her child's father he leaves her, and turns to Hannah Rees, a woman of good family, who has always lived in the village. A year of married life with Hannah teaches Peter that there are fine shadings in morality of which he never dreamed, and that an acknowledged sinner is not always the worst kind. Conclusion is satisfactory.

Jezebel. Bost., Houghton Mifflin. 378 p. D. $1.35 n.

Give a child the name Jezebel, set her down in the midst of quiet, tradition-loving English county society, and trouble and difficulty are almost bound to ensue. Particularly as scandal attaches to the child's mother and the father is not liked. In spite of her name Jezebel is just a spirited, lovable English girl, who could not be anything but straight and true, and who finally by her charm and force of character breaks through the prejudice and suspicion with which she is regarded, and takes her rightful place in the circle to which she was born. By author of "Christopher."

Rizal, José. The reign of greed; a complete English version of El filibustermo; from the Spanish by C: Derbyshire. Yonkers, N. Y., World Bk. Co. c. '12. 12+367 p. D. $1.25.

The social cancer; a complete English version of Noli me tangere, from the Spanish by C: Derbyshire. Yonkers, N. Y., World Bk. Co. 57+502 p. D. $1.25.

These two books present vivid and true pictures of conditions in the Philippines during the last quarter of a century of the Spanish regime in the islands. Translator's introduction in "The social cancer" contains an account of the author, a Filipino with no European blood, who was executed in 1896 as a revolutionist and because of the inflammatory spirit of his works, by the Spanish government. "The social cancer" comes first in point of time, many of the characters reappearing in "The reign of greed."

Roberts, Morley. The private life of Henry Maitland; a record dictated by J. H.; rev. and ed. by Morley Roberts. N. Y., Doran. c. '12. 319 p. D. $1.25 n.

Under a thin veil of disguise book details the unhappy life of George Gissing, the novelist. The story contains amazing disclosures of perseverance, penury, and literary conditions existing in England which seem incredible in this day. This man of acknowledged genius during the greater part of his career, led a dual existence, one of public fame and private poverty.

Vachell, Horace Annesley. Bunch grass; a chronicle of life on a cattle ranch. N. Y., Doran. 11+303 p. D. $1.20 n.

Short stories which have appeared in various English and American magazines. The tales have a certain continuity because they reproduce the atmosphere of the California cow-country, where the author went thirty years ago and remained seventeen years, seeing it change from a cattle and sheep country to one subdivided into many small holdings, and pioneer life and lawlessness, pass away.

Van Gogh, Vincent. The letters of a post-impressionist; being the familiar correspondence of Vincent Van Gogh. Bost., Houghton Mifflin. 47+165 p. por. O. $2 n.

Anthony M. Ludovici has written an introductory essay on Van Gogh and his art to this collection of the artist's letters translated from the German fourth edition, 1911, of Cassirer's "Vincent Van Gogh, Briefe." Van Googh was born in Holland in 1853 and took up painting in 1881. For a while he was influenced by the impressionists, then developed a style of his own, which is more closely allied to the modern French school than to his own country. These letters to his brother and an intimate friend contain his art-credo and state his attitude of mind. He died in 1890.

Van Ness, T: Twenty years of life; messages from an historic Boston pulpit. Bost., Am. Unitarian Assn. 205 p. front. D. $1 n.

Sermons have been selected by congregational vote —one for every year during Mr. Van Ness's ministry, 1892-1912. The volume thus becomes a memento of the church when on Copley Square, Boston. Contents: Why go to church; How shall we love our neighbor as ourself?; An average man; The man below the average; The human temple; The Samaritan in a dress suit; Reaching forth and pressing on; Calvinistic commercialism, etc.

Walter, Herb. Eug. Genetics; an introduction to the study of heredity; with 72 figures and diagrams. N. Y., Macmillan. c. 14+372 p. figs. D. $1.50 n.

Summarizes for the uninitiated reader some of the more recent phases of the questions of heredity which are at present agitating students of biology and also sociology. Begins with chapters on carriers of heritage, variation, mutation, etc., and finally leads up to the application to man. Index. By assistant professor of biology, Brown University.

Wayside lamps; by the author of Especially William, Bishop of Gibralta, and Mary his wife. N. Y., Longmans. 11+148 p. S. 90 c. n.

True stories by a soldier's wife of her friendships with heroic men and women in their times of stress. One "Lamp" is an old soldier's wife dying of cancer; another, a gunner subaltern killed beside his guns. There is an ideal officer who was content to be overlooked as long as the work was done, and a gallant Yeomanry captain who went blanketless for the sake of his rheumatic groom. There is also an aged lady who was still dignified and content when compelled to end her days in the workhouse. Closing sketch is a description of going to their Majesties' court.

Webster, H: Kitchell. The ghost girl. N. Y., Appleton. c. 322 p. front. D. $1.25 n.

Artist just home from Paris has been haunted by a girl supposed to have died there not long before. Asked by her rich aunt to paint the girl's portrait from a photograph he later finds that a girl exactly like the picture has been found murdered in the Hudson River. Tantalizing mysteries follow, woven about the girl's recent appearance to her aunt in spiritualistic seances, and are finally solved when the murdered girl is found to be a sister of the other, whom she impersonated till killed by a very clever villain, while the other girl, imprisoned by him, is rescued just in time.

White, Percy. Ashes and sparks. N. Y., Putnam. 4+395 p. D. $1.25 n.

Story of ideas—ideas entertained and carried into action by a highly intelligent and attractive young woman, who throws her cap over the windmills, not in an impulse of passion, but on conviction and as an assertion of principle. Hunger-striker, woman of fashion, assumed wife of a distinguished man, and finally a martyr to English marriage laws are the phases of her life. Story is told by the dry, devoted, conservative anti-suffragette cousin of the heroine.

FLEMING STONE

The Great American Detective

Solves another baffling and elusive mystery.

In Fleming Stone, the American detective who has figured in her former stories, Miss Wells has created a character whose methods remind one of the great Sherlock Holmes

Well planned crimes are very often those which are most easily ferreted out, but in this case the solution of the mystery, on account of its very simplicity, eludes all investigation. Many of the guests at the house party where the murder occurs are suspected at different times, but it is not until Fleming Stone is called in and applies his magnificent reasoning powers that the mystery is solved. The climax is a complete surprise.

A New Novel by the man who wrote "The Boss of Wind River"

THE great American West has gone through several periods of wonderful appeal to the imagination. First there was the wilderness and the Indian border fighting; later the pioneers, the gold fever and the railroad building; to-day it is the marvel of irrigation, the struggle for water-power and the tremendous "interests" that are in conflict for control of the land and its wealth. If you like this Western land, with its breeziness and rugged outdoors, you'll enjoy every minute of "Precious Waters," for that is the setting of Mr. Chisholm's new tale. It has lots of dramatic interest and a very enjoyable love story.

Devil's Admiral

By Frederick Ferdinand Moore

TRENHOLM, a young man who wanted journalistic fame, set sail on the Kut Sang to save three days' time on his way to the Russian frontier during the Russo-Japanese war. Almost from the time he saw the Kut Sang tied up at the embankment of the Pasig River, startling things began to happen. The boat had hardly left the wharf for Hong Kong, when, in the dead of night, fearful shrieks brought all hands breathless on deck, where they found one of the three passengers dead, with a hooked knife through his heart.

Trego's murder was the first of a series of mysterious happenings. Captain Riggs, and Harris, the mate, acknowledged that they were baffled, and at last it went from lip to lip among the crew that "The Devil's Admiral" was on board. Trenholm asked Captain Riggs who The Devil's Admiral was. "Nobody knows," he explained. "He never leaves a man alive to tell the tale." Some said he was a big Chinaman; some that he was a black man from the African coasts who had been mate in a whaler; still others that he was an ex-officer of the British navy. Trenholm found out. Don't you want to know?

"There is something very generally appealing about MY LITTLE SISTER."—New York Globe.

"Miss Robins has shown unusual skill in laying her groundwork and in sustaining interest."—The Buffalo Express.

"MY LITTLE SISTER is told with infinite skill and the finest of art. Not until it is completed does the reader realize its perfection . . . At every moment of the reading of MY LITTLE SISTER, and during every moment of thought given to it afterwards, the reader feels instinctively its power. It absorbs every grain of feeling in him. It takes possession of him to the exclusion of all else. If he be reading another novel, if he be engaged in other work, if his mind be filled with other matters, they will be crowded out and usurped by the events of this story the instant they recur to him. He cannot get away from them, and he would not get away from them if he could. And in every thought he is giving to it, he is unconsciously paying the award of genius to Miss Robins . . . All that need be added is that MY LITTLE SISTER is a story to be read, rather than a story to read about."—Boston Transcript.

"Will live throughout the entire year as one of the most intense tales of 1913." — Ithaca Daily Journal.

"As a writer, Elizabeth Robins possesses rare art, and while artistry in style is not the essential feature of a book like MY LITTLE SISTER, the delicate efficiency of style, the insistent note of strength make for the real power of the book. Her art is ever present, even though it is not obtrusive. Indeed, the vital message she is calling stands forth above style and art."—Denver Daily News.

"It is one of the grippiest, one of the most unforgettable tales I have read in ages.

"Indeed, the telling is its principal charm. Everything about it is unusual. The plot is unusual, the manner of telling unusually unusual, and the characters, at least Eric Annan's, peculiarly unusual . . . MY LITTLE SISTER will start controversy. "A word should be said about the skilful characterization in the book. I cannot remember a single instance of character analysis. And yet each person stands out clearly and distinctly as an individual."—New York Morning Telegraph.

"Not for a long time has there appeared so intense a story as MY LITTLE SISTER, by Elizabeth Robins, or one to attract such instant attention and arouse such widespread comment. The discussion which this story has aroused is already extraordinary. It will continue long and it will result beneficially."—Boston Times.

"With such charm and reserve is this most artistic story told by Elizabeth Robins.

"Only such a gifted authoress can do justice to the sequel. Suffice it to say that in these days of wholesome probing into terrible realities it is right and proper that such stories as these should be written to shock and horrify us, as mere hearsay can never do, into remedial action or at least a larger sympathy." — Philadelphia Evening Telegraph.

"Miss Robins, the author of MY LITTLE SISTER, is quite as widely known and read in America as in England. This last book arouses questions which, no longer dormant, are exercising the thoughts and arousing the efforts of all men and women 'who are finding in mortal ill the seed of Immortal Good.'"—Richmond Times Dispatch.

"It is a story daringly conceived—yet, one wishes to believe, not for daring's sake—dealing frankly with a problem of our own times."—New York World.

"MY LITTLE SISTER, a big novel. Elizabeth Robins's skill has proved equal to her task. It is a very remarkable literary achievement."—New York Evening Sun.

"'An intense book' the publishers call it. They are quite right. The interest never slackens and the story seems to be burned upon the consciousness. The adaption of the author's style to the theme must be commended. She has succeeded in writing a book which holds the imagination as if it were a drama enacted before the eyes."—Chicago Tribune.

"Elizabeth Robins' poignant novel, MY LITTLE SISTER, has aroused extraordinary interest. It is sure to be read by many thousands . . . for it is a story of intense though harrowing interest. The author evidently wrote it with deep feeling, and the emotion is transmitted to the reader with artistic power."—Chicago Record-Herald.

"The story is effective particularly in that it never becomes hysterical. It is a book that will undoubtedly be widely read and that must have its influence against the thing it denounces . . . A well-sustained love story that centers about the elder sister and the careful delineation of characters give the novel balance and naturalness."—The Register and Leader, Des Moines, Iowa.

"Will be one of the most talked of books of the season."—London Daily News and Leader.

"A distinguished American author says:

"For compact artistic handling of a difficult if amazing plot, I can't think of anything to match Elizabeth Robins' story. I read it once because I couldn't drop it; I read it again because I knew I hadn't got all there was in it; I read it again picking up the finer points; and then I dug into it to find out what the 'trick' was."

"Once an actress, once a newspaper writer, and always a novelist, Miss Robins has built her story with the blended skill of all three. Her 'big third act,' if I may talk the lingo of the stage, is held off with the suspensive skill of a Sardou, and developed with the atmospheric quality of a Belasco.

"All that has gone before points direct to the climax. And yet this is not appreciated till the end comes. There's not a word nor an action but builds up the tale."

Dear Sirs:—Please insert our advertisement, 60 lines deep, two columns wide, in your Saturday issue.

I want to compliment your book page. The reviews by James L. Ford are very attractive, and what I particularly like is that he always tries to interest his readers, not merely in what he has to say, but in the book itself. I know what he did for "The Greater Joy." Your page, with its reviews and important advertisements, is always interesting.

Our advertising in the Herald has proved more satisfactory than that in any other paper. Very truly yours,

THE RENEWAL OF COPYRIGHT.

IT was the desire of the friends of copyright that the new copyright code should assure copyright for a single term of life and fifty years, in consonance with the Berlin convention and the term adopted by most civilized nations, including Great Britain. This would have avoided all question as to renewal complications. At the last moment, the old plan of renewal after the first twenty-eight years was reverted to by the Patents Committee, the renewal term being made twenty-eight instead of fourteen years. In connection with that, the measure was modified, both from the draft approved by authors and publishers and from previous practice, by providing that only the author or his stated next of kin or his executor under a will could renew, the right of renewal being denied to agents of the author, such as publishers, and the renewal right lapsing if there were no next of kin and no will. This withdrawal of the right of renewal from the publisher, under contractual relations with the author, was made supposedly in the interests of authors; but it did not meet the approval of the American (Authors') Copyright League nor of the Publishers' Copyright League, especially with reference to works of which plates might exist at the time of renewal, when the existing publisher might be seriously wronged by a transfer of publication rights to a rival publisher, making the original plates valueless. An amendment to cover this special point was strongly urged by the leagues, but their action had no effect.

As existing copyrights have reached the close of the original term, publishers have naturally sought to learn whether the law was such as to absolutely deny action on their part in protecting the rights of the author and their own rights, and many inquiries have reached us on this point. The only answer is that the law expressly and by intent confines the right of renewal to the author and his heirs, and denies the right of renewal to any less direct representatives. The exceptions refer to such cases as composite works, including periodicals as such, works made for hire, etc.; and the relation of the ordinary author to the publisher is not that of an employee working for hire. The phraseology of the law permits no cover of any kind by which renewal may be indirectly secured by the publisher. It is only by the exercise of the right of the renewal by the author or his legal representatives that the publisher can benefit, and naturally, in nine cases out of ten, the author would be prepared to renew and to continue previous relations with his publisher. The law is so explicit that it is doubtful whether the courts would undertake to enforce a contractual arrangement by which the author bound himself to make the renewal in the interest of the publisher, provided the author proved unwilling to do so when the time for renewal came about; but this question, under the new law, has not been definitely before the courts.

The law works hardships in several instances, and while its motive was good, its effect is likely to be unfortunate. It is greatly to be regretted that the term of life and fifty years was not adopted, obviating all such questions as this at present under discussion. But the fact remains as stated, and the only thing possible is to press for an adoption of what is now the international term when the general provisions of the bill again come up for discussion.

THE British imperial code is now operative throughout the British Empire, inclusive of Australia and Newfoundland as self-governing dominions, with the exception of the remaining self-governing dominions — Canada, New Zealand and South Africa. The schedule of copyright events in the annual Summary Number of the PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY omitted Newfoundland, as it had been taken for granted that Newfoundland had not taken action, because the Legislature there had not acted since July 1, 1912, when the imperial act became effective. But further research proves that action had been had on April 12, when the imperial act was accepted, to take effect, as in Great Britain, from July 1, 1912. The text of the adopting act is printed in this issue of the PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY; it contains no manufacturing clause, and simply repeals existing local acts and adopts in toto the imperial code. As to Australia, although the specific date of its passage by the lower house has not been learned, it seems definite that the act went into effect with the end of the year 1912, and was retroactive from July 1, 1912. This act also contains no manufacturing clause, and simply adapts the processes of the imperial code to the judicial methods of the Commonwealth. In South Africa, a committee of the Parliament has prepared a preliminary report, which also proposes the adoption of the imperial code, probably without the manufacturing conditions, and action is probable within 1913. New Zealand is likely to follow the example of Australia within the present year. Finally, as to Canada, the new Canadian government gave promise, in consultation last fall with the Board of Trade of London, that a bill would be presently presented to Parliament, although no indication of its character was given. It is rather likely that Canada will follow our bad precedent instead of the British precedent, and confine Canadian copyright to works manufactured within Canada, although this will jeopard the rights of Canadian authors in Great Britain itself and in any other countries of the International Copyright Union. Under the imperial code and American relations, the rights of American and British authors, respectively, in the other country remain as heretofore, i. e., first or simultaneous publication (defined as within fourteen days from publication elsewhere) being required for British and manufacture for American copyright. We reprint in this issue the very clear and explicit statement of Mr. E. J. MacGillivray, the best English authority on copyright, made to the Society of Authors, which should be fully reassuring on this point.

It may be added that advices have just come to hand of the adoption by Uruguay, last year, of a copyright code, probably on the lines of the new code adopted by Argentina. The Department of State has also received advices that the Dominican Republic, Guatemala and Nicaragua have ratified the fourth (Buenos Aires) Pan-American convention, thus making that convention effective with the United States; so far, only these four countries have ratified.

THE weaknesses of the parcel post system, and the points of advantage and disadvantage of the present third-class rate for books and printed matter, are well brought out in a letter which we print elsewhere. It was the subject of general criticism, applied specifically in communications to Post Office committees of Congress, at the time the parcel post bill was under consideration, that the failure to make a fractional rate on packages weighing over a point was a fundamental mistake. It was expected that this would be corrected in conference committee, but it was not reached, and the Postmaster-General has not exercised the authority given him under the law to cover this point. He has a free hand in such matters under the law, but this authority does not cover reclassification, which is fixed by the previous laws, and not modified by the parcel post law. The parcel post system would favor the local bookseller in the immediate distribution of books within the first and second zones, but for farther distances is not in general advantageous. The solution is that books and printed matter should be given the privilege of inclusion within the parcel post, but that the present rate or a lower rate should be continued for printed matter as a class. There is a present endeavor, promoted especially by the libraries, to have books rated at one cent for four ounces or four cents a pound, the present rate for single copies of second-class periodicals sent otherwise than from the office of publication or from news agents. There have been numerous amendments of this and of like nature before Congress, and if the point is not covered by legislation within the present session there will doubtless be general and urgent demand for treatment of the question by the new Congress, either in its special session or in the long regular session which is to follow.

COPYRIGHT BETWEEN GREAT BRITAIN AND THE UNITED STATES.

AN OPINION BY E. J. MCGILLIVRAY, COUNSEL OF THE BRITISH SOCIETY OF AUTHORS.

CERTAIN questions were referred to the Society of Authors from a correspondent in America relating to the position of the United States and Great Britain in copyright matters. Accordingly, on the instructions of the Committee of Management, a case for counsel was drafted, setting out the circumstances and putting before him the following questions:

1. Is the proclamation of the President nullified by the act of 1911?

2. If it is not nullified, is it essential, before an American author can obtain copyright in the United Kingdom, that an Order in Council should be issued by His Majesty's government under Section 29?

3. Supposing the property of the United States citizen is insecure under the present circumstances, or, conversely, the property of the English author is insecure in the United States, what course does counsel advise the committee to adopt in order to have the matter settled on a proper international basis?

4. Does counsel consider that an American author, immediately on writing a book or a play, loses his copyright in Great Britain?

5. If the American dramatic author does not lose his copyright, would it be essential for him, in order to retain his performing rights in Great Britain, immediately on the performance of the work in America, to publish the work in book form in England and America?

6. If there is danger that the American author will, through lack of reciprocity, lose his copyright in Great Britain in either of the above cases, what steps would counsel advise the committee of the society to take up in order to set matters on an even basis?

To which counsel replies as follows:

1 and 2. Only in the case of unpublished works. In the case of published works, the order is not necessary where there is first or "simultaneous publication" in the United Kingdom.

3. See opinion.

4. No; he has got an inchoate right, which is only lost by a first "publication" outside the British dominions.

5. No; public performance is not an abandonment of his inchoate right.

6. See opinion.

UNITED STATES AND GREAT BRITAIN COPYRIGHT RELATIONS.

Under the copyright act, 1911, a United States citizen cannot (in the absence of an Order in Council, under Section 29 relating to the United States) claim copyright, within the British dominions, to which the act applies, in respect of any unpublished work, unless he was resident within the British dominions at the date when the work was made. Publication means issuing copies of the work to the public, and does not include public performance. A dramatic work in manuscript or typewritten, performed in public, but not printed or published, is, accordingly, an unpublished work. If any work is first published within the British dominions it acquires copyright, irrespective of the nationality of the author. It is with regard, therefore, to unpublished works only that the American authors do not obtain precisely the same privileges as British authors.

It is suggested, however, that this is a serious matter; that a large percentage of valuable works produced in America are never published, such as dramatic pieces, speeches, sermons, etc., and that with regard to these, the American author is unprotected in the British dominions, although the British author is fully protected in United States both by common law and statute.

The most important of these unpublished works are dramatic works, and the exact position of a dramatic work of an American citizen in this country seems to be as follows:

British copyright in the work is not lost irretrievably by reason of public performance either in America or England or both countries. On the other hand, copyright is not acquired until the work is published as a book within the British dominions to which the act applies. During the intervening period, it is true, there is no statutory copyright or common law right of property, but, on the other hand, any reproduction of the work which constitutes or involves a breach of contract, trust or confidence, may be restrained.

The cases of Abernethy v. Hutchinson (1825), 3 L. J. (O. S.) Ch. 209, and Caird v. Sime (1887), 12 A. C. 326, and others, show that even although there is no common law right of property in an unpublished work, yet if there is a contract between author and audience that the latter come for instruction or amusement only, and must not reproduce the work elsewhere, such reproduction can be restrained either on the ground of breach of contract or of procuring or being privy to a breach of contract. Abernethy v. Hutchinson is some authority for the view that such a contract may be implied from the mere admittance of the audience upon payment of the entrance money. But however that may be, there would be no difficulty, by means of a printed notice on play bills and tickets of admission, in establishing a contract between the owner of the play and each member of the audience, which would be quite effective to preserve intact the owners' rights in the British dominions until such time as he might elect to publish the work in print. It would be practically impossible for any person reproducing the play without authority to plead ignorance of the terms upon which the owner of the play permits it to be represented on the stage. Similar precautions can be taken in the case of cinematograph rights, which should be controlled by the owner of the play. That is to say, cinematograph rights should not be sold outright, but should be the subject of licenses, and the films should not be sold to the cinema theatres, but lent on a hiring agreement.

It may be observed that copyright performance in the British dominions is no longer necessary. Thus the American dramatist can produce his play in America without troubling about simultaneous production in this country.

If, instead of relying upon contract, the American dramatist desires to obtain full statutory protection in the British dominions and to obtain the benefit of summary remedies, he can do so at any time, notwithstanding that the play has already been publicly performed both in America and England, by publishing the printed play in the British dominions. It is not necessary to print the work both in America and England. The English law does not require printing here, and the American law does not require printing in America. Hervieu and J. S. Ogilvie Publishing Co., Am. Pub. Weekly, April 3, 1909, 169 Fed. Rep., 978. See also "Instructions for Securing Copyright, etc.," issued by the Copyright Office, "Dramas No. 5a." "The law does not require that the drama be printed in the United States." The American dramatist has, therefore, his choice to print in America or England, whichever may be cheaper.

Another effective way of securing full rights in England, which would avoid any risk of imperilling cinematograph rights in America, is for the author in the first instance to write his plot in the form of a novelette or amplified scenario. An edition of this could be printed and published at very small cost. I believe that this is now done systematically in the case of original cinematograph dramas. A periodical is published weekly, and a large number of plays are included in each issue. The cost, in respect of each one, is infinitesimal. After this publication, the complete drama, based on the scenario, is produced. It is unnecessary to copyright the drama separately in England, because no one can represent the drama without infringing the copyright in the scenario. The author's rights are also fully preserved in America, where there will be a double copyright in published scenario and unpublished play.

It seems to me, therefore, notwithstanding the exclusion of an unpublished work of an American citizen from statutory protection under the copyright act, 1911, that American authors are, in fact, effectively protected in respect of such unpublished works.

The American act, 1909, Section 8, provides "that the copyright secured by this act shall extend to the work of an author or proprietor who is a citizen or subject of a foreign state or nation only.

"(a) When an alien author or proprietor shall be domiciled within the United States at the time of the first publication of his work.

"(b) When the foreign state or nation of which such author or proprietor is a citizen or subject grants, either by treaty, convention, agreement, or law, to citizens of the United States the benefit of copyright on substantially the same basis as to its own citizens, or copyright protection substantially equal to the protection secured to such foreign author under this act or by treaty. . . ."

"The existence of the reciprocal conditions aforesaid shall be determined by the President of the United States by proclamation made from time to time as the purposes of this act may require."

A proclamation was made on April 9, 1910, whereby it was stated that satisfactory evidence had been received that in the countries therein mentioned, including Great Britain and her possessions, "the law permits and, since July 1, 1909, has permitted to citizens of the United States the benefit of copyright on substantially the same basis as to citizens of those countries," and by which the President declared and proclaimed that subjects of Great Britain "are and, since July 1, 1909, have been entitled to all the benefits of the said act other than the benefits under Section 1 (c) thereof, as to which the inquiry is still pending."

The reservation relates to rights in musical works.

In my opinion, the proclamation is necessarily conclusive for the time-being of the existence or non-existence of the conditions of reciprocity. The President is made the sole judge of the facts, and I do not think it is open to anyone to challenge the findings in the proclamation. Clearly, the President has power to recall the proclamation in respect of any particular country; but until this is done I do not think it is competent to go behind the proclamation merely on the ground that a foreign country has made some alteration in her laws.

In my opinion, therefore, the copyright of British subjects in the United States at present is unaffected by what has taken place in this country.

Then are the conditions such as to involve the danger of the proclamation being recalled unless the British government agrees to make an Order in Council admitting the United States to full rights under Part. II. of the copyright act, 1911?

In my opinion, there is certainly no ground for recalling the proclamation in toto, so as to include the works of all British subjects. I think it is clear that the conditions precedent to reciprocity may exist with regard to one class of work and not with regard to another, and that the proclamation may be limited accordingly. This, in fact, has been done in the case of musical works, "pending inquiry." Now, with regard to books in general, it is obvious that we do not only admit the American citizen to equal rights with our own citizens, but grant protection on a much more advantageous basis than is conceded to the works of British subjects in America. With regard to dramas, speeches, sermons, lectures and other works which are commonly represented or delivered in public without, or at least before, publication in print, I think, considering the practical protection under the law of contract or the law relating to breach of confidence or trust and the facility with which statutory protection can be obtained by the formality of publishing a preliminary précis or skeleton of the work, that American subjects do obtain in Great Britain "copyright protection substantially equal to the protection secured" to British subjects in America. In both countries some formality has to be observed as a condition precedent to protection (I here refer solely to the unpublished work of an American citizen), and the remedies provided in the one country no doubt differ from those provided in the other. I do not suppose, however, that it was ever intended that the relative rights and privileges should be nicely weighed one with the other. It is sufficient if there is a substantial quid pro quo.

If, contrary to my opinion, the American government came to the conclusion that American dramatists, lecturers, etc., do not receive substantially equal rights with those enjoyed by British dramatists in America, then it would be competent to exclude unpublished dramas and lectures from the terms of the proclamation. This would leave the British author to his rights at common law. To recall the proclamation to any greater extent than this would, I think, be unjustified by the change in the British law.

I think, as has all along been intended, Great Britain ought to hold something in reserve which can some day be offered to the States as an inducement to them to relieve British subjects of the manufacturing clause in the case of books. I do not think it is likely that the American government will try to force our hands by threatening to deprive us of all protection if we do not at once surrender everything to American authors. By doing so they would incur the displeasure of the labor party, whose constituents would thus be threatened with the loss of profit on the printing of British books. And not only so, but we could immediately retaliate by putting Section 23 into operation, and thus exclude American authors from all copyright whatsoever in this country.

In my opinion, the present position, that is to say, so long as the Presidential proclamation stands, does not call for any action on the part of the society.

In the event of any proposal to recall the proclamation, or in the event of any decision in the American courts, contrary to the opinion which I have given above, it would no doubt be necessary to communicate with the Foreign Office on the subject.

With regard to Canada, that seems to me to be a question wholly apart. At present, an American author or dramatist can obtain protection in Canada under the imperial acts, 1833 and 1842, which stand unrepealed. It is therefore not necessary to print in Canada. If Canada ultimately repeals the imperial acts, 1833 and 1842, and sets up a manufacturing clause operative against the United States, the States may exclude Canada without affecting her position with regard to Great Britain or the rest of the British dominions.

TEXT OF THE NEW NEWFOUNDLAND COPYRIGHT LAW.*

NEWFOUNDLAND, last April, anticipating the going into force, July 1, 1912, of the British Imperial Copyright Act, passed a new act adopting the Imperial Act. It reads:

AN ACT RESPECTING COPYRIGHT.

2 Geo. V., cap. V.

Whereas, by the Act of the Imperial Parliament 1 and 2 George V., chapter 46, entitled "An Act to Amend and Consolidate the Law relating to Copyright," it is declared that the said Act except such of the provisions thereof as are expressly restricted to the United Kingdom shall extend throughout His Majesty's dominions; and it is provided therein that such Act shall not extend to a self-governing Dominion unless declared by the Legislature of that Dominion to be in force therein:

And whereas it is desirable that this Legislature should declare that said Act shall be in force in this Colony.

Be it therefore enacted by the Governor, the Legislative Council and House of Assembly, in Legislative Session convened, as follows:

1. The Act of the Imperial Parliament 1 and 2 George V., chapter 46, entitled "An Act to Amend and Consolidate the Law relating to Copyright" and all the provisions thereof except such as are expressly restricted to the United Kingdom by the said Act shall be in force throughout the Colony of Newfoundland.

2. Chapter 110 of the Consolidated Statutes (2nd Series), entitled "Of Copyright," is hereby repealed.

3. Chapter 111 of the Consolidated Statutes (2nd Series), entitled "Of the Importation of Books and the Protection of the British Author," is hereby repealed.

4. This Act shall not come into force until the first day of July, 1912.

THE CHANGING PUBLIC TASTE IN BOOKS.

How the Removal of a Big Bookstore Affords Opportunity to Analyze—and Moralize Upon—the Kinds of Books People are Buying.

THE moving of a big retail bookstore to new quarters, says a writer in the New York Evening Post, affords a good opportunity to study how the wind blows and shifts in the public's interest in reading. "Sixty-eight feet of travel, forty-two feet of poetry and drama, thirty-two feet of religion, etc.," may look like an attempt at a familiar kind of joke. But when the man in charge of the retail department of E. P. Dutton & Company's bookstore writes these items and others like them into the shelving plan for their new store, he is guided only by practical considerations, based on the experience of the public's demand for different kinds of books. A brief comparison of the space to be given to the various kinds of books in the new store, with the space given to them in the past, should prove interesting to others besides the booksellers themselves.

The forty-two feet of shelving allotted to poetry and drama, for example, while showing no increase over the amount of space required in the past, reveal, on examination, an interesting change in interest in the two kinds of works. It seems that up to a few years the relative demand was for a great deal of poetry and very little drama; to-day the public asks for a great deal of drama to a very little poetry. According to the booksellers, the plays of Shaw and Ibsen have had a great deal to do with swinging the change in interest toward the drama, while no poets have come up lately to check the drift away from their side of the shelf. An occasional book of verse, like John Masefield's "Everlasting Mercy," or Service's "Spell of the Yukon," sends the demand up for a time for those particular books, but not enough to check the general wane of demand for poetry. Most of the drama space is given up to new and successful plays, which are being published in increasing numbers. But Shakespeare still holds the lead whenever a good edition of his plays is issued.

The "thirty-two feet of religion" represent a notable decrease from the space that subject used to occupy twenty years ago. A partial explanation may lie in the fact that religious books are to-day sold largely by publishing houses that specialize in them. The general impression, however, of those in charge of religious books in this particular store is that the demand for them has fallen greatly in the last decade or two. An interesting item in this department is the rise and fall in the demand for books on New Thought, for which up to a very few years ago there was almost no demand at all. Then, suddenly, it rose until about a year and a half ago books on New Thought took up from twenty-five to thirty feet of shelving, out of the total thirty-two feet allotted to books on religion. Very soon afterward the demand dropped rapidly until at present nine feet of shelf space is sufficient.

The "sixty-eight feet of travel" show a steady increase in the interest in such books in the last ten years and more. This is interpreted to mean that more Americans travel now than formerly, and also that they prepare more carefully for their travels by reading up beforehand. More people buy travel books on Italy than on any other country. There seems to be, however, a growing interest in travel books dealing with our own country. Events or developments of international interest send up for a time the demand for books on the countries concerned. Last year, for example, Secretary Knox's visit to South America was reflected here in the increasing demand for books about that continent; while this year the interest centers about the Isthmus of Panama.

The essay is on the wane, if the decreasing sales in them is any criterion. The forty-five feet given to them on the shelves of the new store are occupied largely by such moderns as Maeterlinck, G. K. Chesterton and Crothers.

The boy and the girl of to-day seem to have lost interest in the favorites their parents read —the stories by Alger, Optic, Castlemon and Henty. Instead, the youngsters have turned to Barbour, Stratemeyer, Tomlinson, and like authors, with their stories of high school and college life, in which athletics occupies the center of the stage. An increasing number of youngsters, too, are discovering the "Jungle Books" by Kipling, stories by Robert Louis Stevenson, Lewis Carroll, the tales of Andrew Lang, of J. M. Barrie, and other such writers. Part of the credit for this improvement in taste may well go to the schools, where of late these authors are increasingly studied.

On the other hand, juvenile fiction, particularly for boys, has a strong rival in books on the elements of such ultra-modern subjects as aeroplanes, wireless telegraphy, and electricity—and many youngsters ask for books on these topics that go much farther than mere introductions.

These experiences with juvenile books chime exactly with what the public libraries report. "The law of the survival of the fittest is pushing the Algers, Optics, Castlemons and Hentys of yesterday off the shelves," stated the head of the New York Public Library to the writer in an interview. "The children of to-day find their namby-pamby heroes and heroines too pale for them, when compared with the full-blooded, fascinating heroes and heroines of 'Treasure Island,' 'Kidnapped,' Kipling's 'Jungle Books,' and 'Captains Courageous,' and their like. And even these superbly written stories have to compete in the modern boy's heart with the fascination that books on aeroplanes, wireless telegraphy, motorboats and motorcycles hold out to them."

The interest in books on nature has increased, but it has become more special and utilitarian. Insects, their effects on vegetation, ways of exterminating them, the character and chemistry of soil, the effect of climate, and manuals on the raising of chickens and the care of cattle take the places formerly occupied by books on amiable excursions into the fields and woods which dealt with everything from grasses, mosses, trees and butterflies to birds and cattle.

One rather conglomerate group of works that will occupy twenty-four feet of shelving in the new Dutton store, and which has shown no change in demand either way, goes under the head of "music, cooking and heraldry." Needless to say, the heraldry group is the smallest of the three.

The magnitude of the task of moving such a store was brought out when an attempt was made to estimate the number of volumes the stock contains. Careful and conservative estimates, obtained in several ways other than actual count, brought the total number to well over six million volumes. This includes, of course, a great number of thin pamphlets and children's picture books. On the other hand, there are large dictionaries and bulky works of different kinds which were taken into calculation.

Another difficulty in moving such a store is the great weight of the stock. "Light as paper" is discovered to be a deceptive phrase when the average weight of the stock is found to be 469 pounds per square foot of flooring. Children's books, with gloss paper and postcards, of which there are millions in the stock, are found to weigh almost as heavy as lead.

In the overhauling of the stock for removal, quite a number of interesting finds were made. Among them is a first edition copy of "Alice Underground," by Lewis Carroll, the first version of the Alice books which was refused by the publishers when he first offered it for publication, but reprinted twenty years after "Alice in Wonderland" was published.

The costliest volume in the store is a copy of Whistler's "The Gentle Art of Making Enemies." In the jeweled binding are 24 topazes, 18 moonstones, 13 garnets, 6 olivines, 4 turquoises, 1 amethyst and 1 ruby. It occupies the place of honor in the rare book room—a dazzling contrast to the hundreds of dead and forgotten books that lie scattered in the limbo of dark and dusty corners of the bookstore vaults—books whose births and fleeting existences must have been the climaxes of much more interesting and pathetic stories than are printed on their time-yellowed pages.

HARVARD BUYS LAW LIBRARY.

A COLLECTION of early manuscripts and printed books relating to English law, which were a part of the great library formed by the late George Dunn, Esq., of Woolley Hall, near Maidenhead, England, was purchased last Tuesday for Harvard University.

Sweet & Maxwell paid Sotheby, Wilkinson & Hodge $18,750 for 355 of the 684 lots which had been put up for sale by order of the executors of Mr. Dunn's estate. The collection will be placed in the Harvard Law Library.

Among the purchases are twenty-six manuscripts and volumes written by Sir Anthony Fitzherbert (1470-1538), including a sound and perfect copy of his "Natura Breviu" (1519), said to be very rare.

There are five samples of the work of Sir John Fortescue (1394-1476), and thirty-eight copies of tenures written by Sir Thomas de Littleton, who spelled his name "Lytylton" (1407-1481). The latter's "Les Tenures" in law French, printed in 1496, is a very rare edition. The only other copy offered for sale up to date appears to have been that of Chomley in 1902, which had the title dated 1496. There are notes by George Dunn, the collector, in the fly leaves and an autograph letter of Gordon Duff relating to the volume.

Among the writings of John Rastell, the English printer and author who served in Parliament in 1529 and married the sister of Sir Thomas More, is a first edition of a very rare book, "Exposiciones i minorz legu Angloz," apparently different from the copy in Cambridge University library. It contains many early signatures and scribblings.

A number of rare manuscripts deal with the Magna Charta, others concern the high and honorable office of justice of the peace and his equally honorable associate, the sheriff. Of interest is a treatise "concernynge divers of the Constitucyons prouynciall and legatines," printed by Thomas Godfray. Manuscripts containing comments on the statutes of early England, a valuable collection of original prints of the statutes themselves and many year books, all go to make an interesting and valuable acquisition to the Harvard Law Library.

BIBLE IN ENGLISH FOR USE OF JEWS.

IF we are to believe newspaper reports, English-speaking Jews are soon to have a translation of the Bible all their own, a version that will be to Jews what the King James version is to the Protestant and what the Douay version is to the Catholic.

This is the first time that a translation of the Jewish Bible, or what Christians call the Old Testament, ever has been made by a group of Jewish scholars representing all shades of Judaism, from the most orthodox to the most reformed. Heretofore, individuals have made translations of the Bible in whole or in part.

The Bible Translation Committee, as it is known, is now in session at the Jewish Theological Seminary, at 531 West 123d Street, New York City. The editors are seven: Dr. Cyrus Adler, president of Dropsie College, of Philadelphia, chairman; Rabbi Samuel Schulman, of Temple Beth-El, president of the Central Conference of American Rabbis; Joseph Jacobs, editor of the American Hebrew and a professor in the Jewish Theological Seminary; Dr. Kaufmann Kohler, president of the Hebrew Union College, of Cincinnati; Max L. Margolis, a professor in Dropsie College; David Philipson, a professor in the Union College; and Rabbi Solomon Schechter, president of the Jewish Theological Seminary.

The committee is working under the auspices of the Central Conference of American Rabbis and the Jewish Publication Society. The King James version of the Old Testament up to the present has been the text-book of English-speaking Jews. But, while they appreciate this from its literary standpoint, there long has been a feeling that all the Messianic prophesies have a Christian interpretation, inasmuch as the work was done by Christian scholars.

THE SPRING PUBLISHING SEASON IN ENGLAND.

(Special Correspondence to The Publishers' Weekly.)

LONDON, January 18.—We have already begun the spring publishing season although, indeed, we have hardly finished counting up the profits and losses of the winter season. It was good in parts, like the proverbial curate's egg, and not so good in other parts. There was nothing, however, greatly discouraging in it, and publishers and booksellers have been able to pay their quarter's taxes, and so we look forward to the spring season with good hopes, if not exactly with high hopes. The poets say that "a young man's fancy turns to thoughts of love" in the spring, and the thoughts of those engaged in the English book trade at least turn forward determined to make the best of things, and upon the whole the outlook is encouraging, unless we get another war somewhere to disturb us, or a General Election, which is even more disturbing from the standpoint of the book trade, because it engulfs all the spare money and there is none for new volumes.

When we are in a state of looking forward, we are generally also in a state of looking backward, or, in other words, we try to discover from what has been, what is going to be. This has led me to look up the figures of English book publishing during the past ten years, in order to ascertain what the volume of increase has been. They are very interesting, very instructive, and they will be easier to grasp if I throw them into a little table thus:

YEAR.	NEW BOOKS.	NEW EDS.	TOTAL.
1903	6,699	1,682	8,381
1904	6,456	1,878	8,334
1905	6,817	1,435	8,252
1906	6,985	1,618	8,603
1907	7,701	2,213	9,914
1908	7,512	2,309	9,821
1909	8,446	2,279	10,725
1910	8,468	2,336	10,804
1911	8,530	2,384	10,914
1912	9,197	2,870	12,067

Now, what do those figures mean? They mean that in ten years the output of books in England, including new editions and absolutely fresh reprints, has increased nearly fifty per cent. That is a remarkable thing to have happened in so short a time, but it is not difficult to give the explanation.

It lies chiefly in the tremendous rise of cheap reprints, or cheap new books, and if the figures were analyzed they would almost startle us in that respect. Twenty years ago we had not a tithe of the new editions which now load the shelves of the London booksellers for the very reason that there was no demand for them. The English reading public then was a limited public of highly educated people, and the other public, the great public, had only just begun to make itself heard. In the interval, however, that great public has come along with tremendous energy and, if we may put it so, simply eaten up the cheap editions and reprints as rapidly as they could be produced by a Nelson or a Dent.

The cheap edition and the reprint are bought and paid for, cash down, at the counter, and not borrowed, as more expensive books in England still are to a great extent. That has been the change as it has effected the organization of the book trade, and sometimes you will hear the booksellers grumble at the overturn they have to make in order to get anything like a decent return for their funds. They are adapting themselves, however, to this new state of affairs, or otherwise there would not be the huge sale there is for new editions and reprints, because the bulk of that sale is done through the ordinary bookseller.

An instructive parallel might be drawn between the English daily newspaper and the English book just at this moment. Your newspapers, with their note of popular appeal to the public, have influenced the style of ours a good deal in recent years. That style has led us to the halfpenny paper, and it may be pretty safely said now that the halfpenny daily paper is to be the London daily paper of the future. Well, the cheap reprint may be called the halfpenny paper of the book world, the halfpenny paper of literature, the thing which everybody can afford to buy and does buy. You have to sell six times as many copies of a cheap reprint to get the profit you would have had on one old-fashioned book, but then you may as well be selling them as standing in your shop twiddling your thumbs and wondering when somebody is to come along and buy something.

When the halfpenny paper first came to London the cry was that it was bought only by the vulgar public. There was something of the same sort of attitude in regard to the cheap reprint, but it has completely disappeared, and now dukes and earls and duchesses and countesses are not ashamed to send to their bookseller and order a bundle of good shilling reprints for week-end reading in their country houses. Nay, they do better than that, for they furnish their visitors' bedrooms with dainty shelves of those books, and so a guest can read in pleasure, instead of having, as he would once have had to do in an English country house, to go into a great desolate library full of ghosts and look amid a collection of armor and dust for a passably readable book.

The big British public of readers, by which I mean the democracy, is "making good," as you say in America, in quite a remarkable fashion. It is putting to scorn altogether the idea that nothing would be read, as some cynic once said of the people, but mob literature, say "The Adventures of Jack Shepherd," or at the best, "The Adventures of Robinson Crusoe." That has proved all wrong, for what the masses of English readers are reading is the very best literature which they can get at manageable prices. It is a democratic public, a public "o't wild mob's million feet," as Tennyson, in a line of doubtful truth, once expressed it: but it is a good public, even a genuine book-loving public, certainly a public that reads to learn and not merely to find trivial excitement, as so many of the moneyed folks of England and America do, in more or less "spicy" novels.

We have a striking confirmation of this in the ups and downs of particular classes of literature during the year 1912. True, fiction went up, and fiction, one may say, is always going to go up, because what does a child ask for but for a story, and what is the last thing a decrepit old man, insensible to anything else, asks for, but also a story?

CORRESPONDENCE

PARCEL POST AND THE BOOKTRADE.

To the Editor of The Publishers' Weekly.

DEAR SIR: Having noticed several letters recently in the New York daily papers and also in the PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY, relating to books and the parcel post, the writer would like to make a few comments which may prove of interest to the booktrade. In one of the letters the correspondent urging the inclusion of books in the parcel post made the remark that the present postal rate on books was 8c. a pound. This is not correct. Books, pamphlets, catalogues, circulars and such like matter are included in the "third class," the rate for which is 1c. for every 2 ozs., or every fraction of two ounces, not 8c. a pound. Bear this in mind in comparison with the new rates of the parcel post at so much per pound according to the zone. But a fraction of a pound above four ounces shall be considered as one pound, and every fraction of a pound over a pound shall be considered as a full pound. Four ounces or less than four ounces to be at the rate one cent per ounce.

Now let us analyze this a little closer. A book package weighing 32 ounces under the present rate would cost 16 cents, and one weighing 34 ounces 18 cents—to any part of the world in the Postal Union, and using any of our regular postage stamps.

The same packages under the new parcel post rate would be:

First Zone	Second Zone	Third Zone	Fourth Zone
8c. and 11 c.	10c. and 14c.	12c. and 17c.	14c. and 20c.
Fifth Zone	Sixth Zone	Seventh Zone	Eighth Zone
16c. and 23 c.	19c. and 28c.	21c. and 31c.	24c. and 36c.

This example shows a cheaper rate only for the two-pound package in the first four zones, the fifth zone the same price, and all beyond the fifth zone a gradually increasing rate. For the second package a cheaper rate only in the first three zones and a rapidly increasing rate in the other zones. Add to this the disadvantages of having to buy special stamps no matter how many other stamps you may have on hand, and the time taken in looking up the destination of each package to find the zone and the cost, and you will come to the conclusion that the present rate is the best, cheapest and the one that occupies the least time to complete the delivery at the post office.

Now, everyone handling books knows that owing to the diversity of size, thickness and weight of paper, etc., packages of books will more often weigh fractions of pounds than full pounds, and as the new parcel post rate deals only in pounds, the cost to the sender of many packages will total much in excess of the present book rate of one cent for two ounces.

Now to come down to the keynote of the whole subject, should the government decide to put books in parcel post. They will cancel the present "third class rate" of one cent for two ounces. What then will happen to your most important "business getter," the catalogue?

Under the present rate two ounces will be one cent, four ounces two cents. Under the parcel post rate the two ounce catalogue will be two cents, the four ounce catalogue four cents, an increase of 100 per cent. Will your customers pay the extra postage?

Still another example. A large New York firm the writer is acquainted with publishes a series of catalogues each year—one in the spring with an edition of about 170,000, weight about six ounces each. This edition is bound, wrapped, stamped and mailed in van loads by the binder. Just consider the immense amount of labor entailed if every piece of this mail had to be handled to see under what zone it was to be classified.

Under the present rate a 3-cent stamp will be sufficient for any part of the world. Under the parcel post rate the increased postage required would be enormous, because each piece would be considered by Uncle Sam as weighing one pound at 5c., 6c., 7c., 8c., 9c., 10c., 11c., and 12c. each, according to zones.

Does the bookseller want books to be included in the new parcel post?

BOOKSELLER.

BOOKSELLERS' LEAGUE.

HAVE you red-lettered next Wednesday night in your engagement calendar? It is the date of the eighteenth annual banquet and ladies' night of the Booksellers' League. The dinner will be, as usual, at the Hotel Brevoort, Fifth Avenue and Eighth Street, and at 7 o'clock. It will be absolutely necessary for you to do your part by notifying Mr. F. D. Lacy, of G. P. Putnam's Sons, 2 West 45th Street, of your intention to be present. Additional tickets, at $2 each, may be obtained of the treasurer, Charles A. Burkhardt, 31 West 23d Street.

The entertainment committee and the president have worked hard to make the programme an attractive one—and have certainly succeeded. Ida Tarbell, I. V. Simonton and Dorothy Canfield, the author of "The Squirrel Cage," will be among the speakers, and Mrs. Frederick Leypoldt will sing.

There will probably be another record-breaking attendance, but there will be plenty of room for new members, and a better time to introduce them to the League could not be found.

COPYRIGHT NOTES.

ACCESSIONS TO BUENOS AIRES CONVENTION.

THE State Department at Washington has received information from the legation at Buenos Aires that, in addition to the United States, the fourth Pan-American treaty respecting copyright has been ratified by the Dominican Republic, Nicaragua and Guatemala. The treaty is, therefore, effective among these four powers, and steps have been taken by the department to bring the matter to the attention of the South American powers in general.

POSTAL MATTERS.

ANOTHER MOVE TO CHANGE BOOK RATES.

SENATOR SMITH introduced, February 5, an amendment providing for the admission of books to the parcel post.

50,000,000 PARCELS FIRST MONTH.

NEARLY 50,000,000 packages were sent by parcel post in the first month of its operation, according to figures made public to-day. The nine cities leading in the use of the new system are, in order; Greater New York, received 938,108, sent 3,415,680; Chicago, 548,500 and 3,619,653; Boston, 416,650 and 734,758; Philadelphia, 336,345 and 698,655; St. Louis, 189,791 and 728,018; Cleveland, 121,937 and 757,831; Detroit, 189,980 and 320,092; Cincinnati, 107,300 and 10,381; and Kansas City, Mo., 81,291 and 275,811.

OBITUARY NOTES.

GEORGE H. PEARSON, a Newburyport, Mass., bookseller, newsdealer and stationer, died recently.

LEWIS JAMES HERRINGTON, manager of the William G. Hewitt Press, of Brooklyn, N. Y., died January 27.

JOHN SLOTE, who belonged to a family known in the book publishing business in New York, and who retired about five years ago, died last Friday at his home, 322 Throop Avenue, Brooklyn, in his seventy-second year. He was born in New York in 1841, a son of Daniel Slote. One brother, Daniel Slote, a publisher, was the "Dan" of Mark Twain's "Innocents Abroad," and another brother, Alonzo Slote, was of the firm of Slote & Janes, law book publishers.

MRS. IRENE ELLIOTT BENSON, widow of Grenville R. Benson, died on Thursday, February 6, at her residence, 445 West 153d Street, New York. Mrs. Benson was born in Syracuse, but spent most of her life in New York. She had for several years been a contributor of short stories and poems to the magazines. She was also the author of several books, among them "The Yellow Princess," "Billy," "The Jimmy-John Twins," and "The Jimmy-John Twins in London," now on the press. She was engaged in writing a series of Boy Scout and Girl Campfire stories.

ISAAC A. MEKEEL, vice-president and treasurer of the United Publishers' Corporation, which publishes Iron Age, Dry Goods Economist, Motor Age, The Automobile, etc., died suddenly, February 3, at his home in Montclair, N. J. Death followed an attack of acute indigestion. Mr. Mekeel had been previously in excellent health. Isaac A. Mekeel was born in Iowa forty-two years ago. He went to St. Louis, and with his brother, G. D. Mekeel, now publisher of the Twin City Commercial Bulletin, published Mekeel's Weekly Stamp News, one of the most successful philatelic papers ever printed. In 1900, Mr. Mekeel became a solicitor for the Dry Goods Economist, four years later becoming secretary of the organization that published it. When the United Publishers' Corporation was formed, Mr. Mekeel's influence had much to do with its success, and he was made its vice-president and treasurer.

JOSEPH JAMES LITTLE, twice president of the Board of Education of this city, a former Congressman from the Twelfth District, Civil War veteran and head of the printing and bookbinding firm of J. J. Little & Ives, of 435 East 24th Street, died of pneumonia on Tuesday at his residence at 47 West 68th Street. Mr. Little was born in England in 1824, and came to this country at the age of five years with his parents, who settled in central New York. After attending the district school, Mr. Little was apprenticed to a printer in Morris, Otsego County. In 1859 he came to New York, continuing in the printing business with such success that he went into business for himself under the firm name of Little, Rennie & Co. Mr. Little was married in 1866 to Miss Josephine Robinson, and the following year commenced the business which, since 1876, has been known as J. J. Little & Ives. Mr. Little is survived by his wife, two daughters and two sons, A. W. and R. D. Little, associated with him in the printing business.

THE REV. DR. HOMER EATON, prominent in the Methodist Church and senior member of the firm of Eaton & Mains, publishing agents of the Methodist Book Concern, died last Monday at his home in Madison, N. J. He was born in Enosburg, Vt., on November 16, 1834. He went to Bakersville Academy and the Theological Seminary at Concord, N. H., and secured his degree of doctor of divinity at Syracuse in 1878, and had degrees of LL.D. conferred on him by Syracuse and Nebraska Wesleyan University in 1907. He was admitted to the Troy Conference on trial in 1857, and was its first assistant secretary, 1861 to 1870. After occupying several important pulpits he was elected publishing agent of the Methodist Book Concern, which office he held up to the time of his death. He was a delegate to conferences of the Methodist Church in this country, Canada and England, presiding elder of the Albany district and subsequently of the Cambridge district, treasurer of the Board of Foreign Missions, and trustee of several universities and theological seminaries.

CHARLES MAJOR, author of "When Knighthood Was in Flower," died at his home at Shelbyville, Ind., on February 13. For a year he had suffered from cancer of the liver. Charles Major was born in Indianapolis, Ind., July 2, 1856, the son of Stephen and Phoebe A. Major. The early years of his life were spent on a farm, and his education was received in the common schools of Indianapolis and Shelbyville, where he was graduated from the high school with high honors. He early developed a fondness for reading, and in order to satisfy his longing for study he entered the Michigan State University at Ann Arbor and remained there three years. His father was a Circuit Court judge, whose supreme wish it was that his son should be a lawyer. "With a heart full of smothered rebellion," wrote his son later, "I submitted to my fate." He began the practice of law in Shelbyville and continued at his work for fifteen years. Financially, he was successful, but in later life he recalled these years as "fifteen years of nightmare." His release finally came when he proved his ability to write. His very first novel was a best-seller. He used the nom de plume of "Edwin Caskoden," but when "Knighthood," published in 1898, began to mount up editions, its popularity led to the discovery by publishers of Mr. Major's real name, and he thereafter devoted his time to writing. "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall," in 1902, was his next big success. This reversion to the historical, dropped for the time when he wrote "Bears of Blue River," 1900, brought back all his old readers and a host of new ones. Then came "A Forest Hearth," 1903; "Yolanda, Maid of Burgundy," 1905; "Uncle Tom Andy Bill," 1908; "A Gentle Knight of Old Brandenburg," 1909; "The Little King" in 1910; and "The Touchstone of Fortune," 1912. Of all his books, the ones he liked best were "A Forest Hearth" and "Yolanda, Maid of Burgundy." Mr. Major is survived by his wife, formerly Miss Alice Shaw.

PERIODICAL NOTES.

THE Popular Electricity Publishing Company, Chicago, has leased for a period of ten years a suite of five offices on the third floor of the new Thompson Building, at a rental of $240,000 for the term.

THOMAS C. WATKINS has succeeded T. Dixon Tennant as editor of Wilson's Photographic Magazine. Mr. Watkins is known in art circles, and well equipped for the conduct of this old established journal.

THE April number of the American Historical Review (Macmillan's) will contain the full text of the address on "History as Literature," which Colonel Roosevelt delivered December 27 before the American Historical Association.

CAPTAIN ROSTRON, of the "Carpathia," has never before given an authorized account of his rescue of the "Titanic" survivors. In Scribner's Magazine for March will be his remarkable narrative, written with the blunt directness of a sailor. It will be accompanied by some striking photographs taken by a passenger on the "Carpathia."

THE Dial Company call the attention of the trade to its Books of the Month, pointing out that its circulation exceeds that of all other imprint mediums combined, and that it can be mailed with bills, statements, etc., without extra labor or expense, and asking that it be compared with others in general arrangement, form and up-to-the-minuteness.

THE San Francisco Call announces that it has engaged the services of Porter Garnett as literary editor. Mr. Garnett was associated in 1895-96 with Gelett Burgess in the conduct of the Lark; he was assistant editor of the Argonaut, doing much of its book reviewing, has contributed monthly critical essays to the Pacific Monthly, and during the last five years has been attached to the University of California. He is editor of the papers of the San Francisco Committee of Vigilance of 1851, and author of the poetic drama, "The Green Knight," the Bohemian Club grove play performed in August, 1911.

JUDGES LACOMBE, Coxe, Noyes and Ward, sitting en banc in the Federal Court for the Southern District Court of New York, on Wednesday, heard final arguments and reserved decision in the government's action against the so-called "magazine trust." The defendants are the Periodical Clearing House, Doubleday, Page & Co., S. S. McClure Company, the Phillips Publishing Company, Harper & Brothers, Leslie-Judge Company, Review of Reviews Company, Ridgway Company, Short Stories Company, Ltd., and Frank A. Doubleday, Frederick L. Collins, Herbert S. Houston, Charles D. Lanier and George Von Utassy. The government charges that the defendants operated in restraint of trade, and asks that they be enjoined from carrying out certain alleged contracts, combinations and conspiracies and attempts to monopolize trade in periodicals.

LITERARY AND TRADE NOTES.

MITCHELL KENNERLEY predict great things for their new anonymous novel, "The Eternal Maiden."

THE University of Chicago Press have postponed the publication of August Bebel's life to February 17.

"THE WINSTON COOK BOOK," an illustrated volume of some five hundred pages, by Helen Cramp, is planned for a family of four.

"PIPPIN," which the Century Co. will publish February 21, is Miss Evelyn Van Buren's first book, though her magazine stories are well known.

ANOTHER E. Phillips Oppenheim novel is promised for March 15 by Little, Brown & Co.—again a tale of tremendous happenings, involving the destiny of nations.

ALFRED NOYES, the English poet, is coming to this country and will be entertained by friends in Boston. On February 27 he is to read from his own poems at Wellesley College.

H. G. WELLS, the great authority on things that are going to happen, has once more drawn upon his imagination for the material in "The Discovery of the Future," to be published shortly by B. W. Huebsch.

NATHAN GALLIZIER'S "The Hill of Venus," on the L. C. Page list, tells the story of a thirteenth-century monk who, bound to the church through the coercion of a dying father, finds himself in love with a famous beauty of the court at Avellino.

ISAAC MENDOZA BOOK CO. have just published a second revised and enlarged edition of Frederick S. Lipson's "The Theory of Accounts," a volume of questions, answers and explanations of value to those desiring to take C. P. A. examinations.

HENRY OTIS DWIGHT, author of "Constantinople and its Problems," has announced, through the Fleming H. Revell Company, a story of Turkish life, entitled "A Muslim Sir Galahad," a present-day story of a son of Islam, which will be published this month.

WHEN Gov. Hodges signs a bill passed February 8, Kansas will become its own publisher of text-books used by the school children of the State. The measure carries an appropriation for enlarging the State printing plant that will turn out the books. Pupils are to buy the books at actual cost.

"CONCERT PITCH," Frank Danby's forthcoming novel (Macmillan), tells of a girl who, expected to make a "good match" socially, runs off with a young musician with whom she has become infatuated. Her awakening and the dawning realization that she is not mated to the man she really cares for, follows.

FIRE early in the week in the home of Arthur Scribner, of Charles Scribner's Sons, at 39 East 67th Street, New York City, was extinguished with slight loss. A coal fell from the grate in one of the living rooms and ignited the woodwork, and the blaze was spreading when a member of the household turned in an alarm.

A NEW series of art books is started by the J. B. Lippincott Co. with the publication of Louis Hourticq's "Edouard Manet" and Andre Michel's "Puvis de Chavannes." The series will be known as French Artists of Our Day, and each volume will be illustrated with forty-eight reproductions from the best works of each artist.

NEW books to be published by Forbes & Company during February are: "Divorcing Lady Nicotine," by Henry Beach Needham; "Women as World-Builders," by Floyd Dell; "The Man and The Woman," by Arthur L. Salmon; "A Table for Two, Good Things to Eat," by Ella Eldene; and "Making the Farm Pay," by C. C. Bowsfield.

AMONG the new books announced by the Italian publishing house of Fratelli Treves (Milan) are: "Parisina," by Gabrielle D'Annunzio; "La Gorgone," by Sem Benelli; and new volumes of fiction by A. Beltramelli, Grazia Deledda, and F. de Roberto. The Duchess of Aosta's "Tre Viaggi in Africa" will be published by the same firm.

THE Putnams will publish, late in February, a volume entitled "Synonyms, Antonyms, and Associated Words," by Louis A. Flemming. The volume is planned for the use of journalists, correspondence clerks and all active-minded people who are interested in writing or speaking correctly, but who have not had the advantage of a philological training.

GOV. WOODROW WILSON'S book, "The New Freedom," to be issued shortly, is prominent on the Doubleday, Page list. Booth Tarkington's new novel, "The Flirt," announced by the same publishers, is a story of American home life. In taking up the various characters, Mr. Tarkington has picked the flirt that jilted you—for everybody has been engaged to a flirt once, anyhow.

GEORGE E. NEVINS, for several years with the Eau Claire Book and Stationery Co., of Eau Claire, Wis., and later with the Tabard Inn Book Co., of Philadelphia, has joined the traveling staff of Laird & Lee, the well-known Chicago publishers. Mr. Nevins will show this line in all the large eastern and southern cities. Mr. Nevins is also an active member of the Booksellers' League of New York City and the Booksellers' Association of Philadelphia.

SUCH diversified topics as the nature of time and the position of women are fairly discussed in Sir Oliver Lodge's "Modern Problems," published to-day by George H. Doran Co. Balfour, Bergson, Huxley, war, the poor law and the smoke nuisance have their chapters, as well as a number of other subjects, on all of which the author has something to the point to say. "The Blindness of Virtue," Cosmo Hamilton's discussion-provoking play, is also published to-day.

ERNEST K. COULTER, whose book, "The Children in the Shadow," is published this month by McBride, Nast & Co., helped to organize the New York Children's Court, and as clerk served there for nearly ten years. During this time he saw one hundred thousand children arraigned. His experience showed him the value of the friendly personal touch in dealing with these youthful offenders, and, as a result of this, he organized the Big Brother Movement, which has been taken up by forty cities.

THE following were the best-sellers in Canada last month:

		POINTS.
1.	Corporal Cameron. (Ralph Connor)	96
2.	Rhymes of a Rolling Stone. (Robert W. Service)	43
3.	The Long Patrol. (H. A. Cody)	37
4.	The Net. (Rex Beach)	30
5.	Their Yesterdays. (Harold Bell Wright)	27
6.	Sunshine Sketches of a Little Town. (Stephen Leacock)	18

BESIDE being a novelist and short-story writer, Earl Derr Biggers, author of "Seven Keys to Baldpate," is recognized as a clever dramatist as well. In December, 1912, his comedy, "If You're Only Human," was tried out by the William Parke players at the Colonial Theatre, in Pittsfield, Mass., where it continued for one week. Later, a special performance was given in Boston, and immediately after this production it was purchased by a New York concern. Plans are now under way for its production on Broadway early in the spring.

"The Necessary Evil," a one-act play, by Charles Rann Kennedy, is just published by the Harpers. It expresses what the author thinks of the social evil. There are only four persons in the cast: a musician, his innocent young daughter, his son, and a woman of the street. In a dramatic enlightening scene, the young girl learns that innocence must be a force, and not a fêtish. Among the new Harper novels are May Sinclair's "The Combined Maze," William Dean Howells' "New Leaf Mills," and Herman Whitaker's "The Mystery of the Barranca."

A bill to regulate the transmission of news over telegraph and telephone wires, the purpose of which is to require the Associated Press and all news organizations or associations to furnish service wherever proper pay for the same is offered, has passed both Arkansas Houses, with very slight opposition, and will no doubt be signed by the Acting Governor. Those who favored its passage said the advantage of certain papers in having obtained the Associated Press service to the exclusion of other newspapers was a monopoly which should be broken.

In England and in the New York clubs they are calling it Cooncan, believed to be a corruption of the Mexican Conquian. Out in the West and in Philadelphia they speak of it as "Rum." Now, how can a game gain popularity with such a name as Rum? It would lead players into all sorts of awkward explanations. Consequently, when R. F. Foster's book on the new game was ready, the author and publishers agreed to give it the title, "Cooncan," believing that in the long run that is the name by which the game will be known. The book will be published by Stokes in the first week of February.

Price Collier, Henry James, James Huneker and William T. Hornaday are among the most notable writers who contribute works of non-fiction to the spring list of Charles Scribner's Sons. Henry James' book, "A Small Boy, and Others," is concerned with his own childhood and that of his brother, William James. Price Collier's "Germany and the Germans" is a presentation of that nation in the style of "England and the English." James Huneker contributes "The Pathos of Distance," a series of studies of artists, writers and current questions in his familiar style. The title of Mr. Hornaday's book, "Our Vanishing Wild Life: Its Extermination and Preservation," sufficiently explains its nature.

Pope Pius X. has bestowed upon the board of editors of the "Catholic Encyclopedia" the decoration, "Pro Ecclesia et Pontifice." The order was instituted by Pope Leo XIII. in 1888, and the decoration was made a permanent distinction in 1898. Its object is to reward those who in a general way deserve well of the Pope on account of services to the Church and its head. The medal is of gold, silver or bronze. The board of editors of the "Catholic Encyclopedia" consists of Charles G. Herbermann, Ph.D., LL.D., professor of Latin language and literature at the College of the City of New York; Edward A. Pace, Ph.D., D.D., professor of philosophy at the Catholic University in Washington; Conde B. Pallen, Ph.D., LL.D., of New Rochelle; Mgr. Thomas J. Shahan, D.D., rector of the Catholic University, Washington, and the Rev. J. J. Wynne, S.J.

Ground was broken for the Widener Library in Harvard at noon, Tuesday. George D. Widener, of Philadelphia, whose mother gave the two-million-dollar edifice in memory of her son, Harry Elkins Widener, a "Titanic" victim, turned over the first spade of earth. Mrs. Widener had intended to perform that ceremony, but a slight illness confined her to her hotel in Boston. President Lowell also turned over sod. It was a simple ceremony. Few persons had been invited to attend it. Snow fell throughout the ground-breaking. Among those in attendance were Archibald C. Coolidge, chairman of the Library Council; William C. Lane, college librarian; the members of the Board of Overseers, and the Library Council. Although a part of Gore Hall is not obliterated, work will be started toward the erection of the new building, steam shovels being employed. The structure, it is thought, will be complete in two years.

The arrangement between the respective publishing organizations of the University of Chicago and the University of Cambridge, by which the latter is given the exclusive agency in the British Empire for the former's publications, is now being supplemented by a reciprocal agreement, the Chicago institution taking over the American agency for a number of the Cambridge publications. An arrangement has already been concluded for the Cambridge journals, and the following periodicals in the future will be issued in America under joint imprint: Biometrika, Parasitology, Journal of Genetics, The Journal of Hygiene, The Modern Language Review, The British Journal of Psychology, The Journal of Agricultural Science. Several new books from the Cambridge list are also to be taken over at once and published in this country under joint auspices. The list includes "The Life and Letters of Lord Hardwicke," by M. Philip Chesney Yorke; "The Duab of Turkestan," by W. Rickmer Rickmers; "The History of Romanesque and Byzantine Architecture," by Thomas Graham Jackson; and "The Genus Iris," by William Rickatson Dykes. The publications selected all embody the results of research. This movement toward a closer co-operation between the two universities is a matter of special interest to all concerned with the advancement of scientific and scholarly research and the preservation of its results. The difficulties involved in the publication of such material are too obvious to need comment, and it is to be hoped that an arrangement that promises so much aid in this direction may be further extended.

BUSINESS NOTES.

BADGER, S. D.—C. F. Helmey has succeeded Lee & Johnson, druggists and booksellers.

BINGHAMTON, N. Y.—The Vail Company, book manufacturers, formerly of Coshocton, O., has been merged with the Vail-Ballou Co., of 24-32 Jarvis Street, Binghamton, N. Y., and on and after March 1, 1913, all correspondence should be addressed to the latter concern at Binghamton. The process of gradually removing the machinery and other material from Coshocton to Binghamton is now under way, but there will be very little, if any, interference with the progress of work. It is expected that all machinery will be installed and in proper running order in Binghamton no later than March 15. The consolidation of these two plants affords the output of fifty linotype operators, or the composition and electrotyping of 1500 ordinary book pages daily. This is one of the largest outputs of any similar concern in the United States. The personnel of the management will be the same as before the merger.

BOSTON, MASS.—On a petition of creditors, Referee Olmstead, of the United States Bankruptcy Court, in Boston, has appointed Samuel O. Reinstein receiver of the Williams Book Store, Inc., of 349 Washington Street. The bond was fixed at $2000. The liabilities amount to $14,945, and the assets $2800.

BROOKLINE, MAS.—A. J. Hayman, bookseller, newsdealer and stationer, is reported out of business.

CHICAGO.—B. Login & Son, 1328 Third Avenue, New York, dealers in medical books and periodicals, write us: "We have been informed that a firm bearing the same name as ours will start in the medical book business in Chicago. They are not connected with us in any way."

COZAD, NEB.—T. B. Hughes succeeds K. M. Tunison, books and fancy goods.

GALION, O.—The Campbell Book Store has been sold to Simon J. Baumgartner.

GUATEMALA, CENTRAL AMERICA.—William B. Allison, of the Guatemala Mission of the Presbyterian Church, has opened a bookstore in connection with the mission. Address, Apartado, No. 174.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—The New and Old Book Co., one of the oldest and largest bookstores of its kind in this section, has been bought by the Baptist Book Concern, of this city. This shop of 60,000 volumes, many rare and valuable, is interesting, if not unique, in having been successfully conducted for the past seventeen years exclusively by a woman—Miss Monahan. The shop is well known here as well as abroad, as Miss Monahan imports rare books from England, France and Germany. She will go with the Baptist Book Concern, continuing the conduct of the business as heretofore.

LYONS, N. Y.—Hartman-Shepard Co., booksellers, newsdealers and stationers, are incorporated.

MARYSVILLE, CAL.—Locklin & Eastman have opened a new book and stationery store in the I. O. O. F. Building.

NEVADA, MO.—The George B. Voss Book Store Co. has succeeded B. P. Mayes.

NEW BERN, N. C.—George N. Emmett has discontinued his book and stationery business in this town.

NEW YORK CITY.—Lyman Lewis Settel, a creditor for services, has filed a petition in bankruptcy against the J. H. Simmons Publishing Company, printer and publisher, at 130 William Street. It was alleged that the company is insolvent, made preferential payments of $500, and that there are less than twelve creditors. It was stated that the liabilities are $35,000 and assets $5000. The company's financial statement of June 20, 1912, showed assets of $52,740 and liabilities of $7352. The company was incorporated in March, 1909, with capital stock of $500,000, but has no rating in Bradstreet's. About a year ago the company bought the business of the Charles F. Bloom Press.

WINCHESTER, KY.—W. S. Duty & Co. has succeeded the Phillips Drug Co., druggists and booksellers.

Billy Magee, writer of melodramatic novels, determines to write a story that shall be real literature. A friend gives him a key to Baldpate Inn, a summer hotel, and he goes there for quiet and solitude. He has only arrived when he discovers that there is another key and another occupant of the house; before morning still another is added. Each draws on his imagination to account for his presence, but agrees not to inquire too closely into the others' affairs. Then four more people using four more keys arrive, three women among them, and Magee finds himself in the midst of more melodrama than his raciest book possessed, and in which he and a package containing $200,000 play the leading roles.

Holmes, Gordon. No other way. N. Y., Clode. c. '12. 4+308 p. D. $1.25 n.

Story opens with the divorce of Mrs. Claude Waverton from her husband, who is a worthless, dissipated young man. He has been injured in an automobile accident in Florida and is nursed by the woman, Mrs. Delamar, with whose name his has been coupled for some time. Upon his recovery he is a changed man, apparently in every way. The death, under suspicious circumstances of Mrs. Delamar's husband leads to the shadowing of Waverton, who has repudiated the woman, and also throws him with his wife. The evidence seems to show that Waverton was killed in the accident, and that he is being impersonated by another man. Who Waverton really is, who really killed Mrs. Delamar's husband and the part two detectives play in tracing the crime make a surprising story.

Hornung, Ernest W: Witching Hill; il. by F. C. Yohn. N. Y., Scribner. c. 274 p. D. $1.25 n.

Eight distinct stories, through all of which runs the same sinister influence. Uvo Delavoye, descendant, not in direct line, of the infamous Lord Mulcaster, comes to live in one of the suburban villas erected on his ancestor's estate. Crimes and tragedies follow, which have their counterpart in Lord Mulcaster's career. Uvo believes that there is a malign influence at work, which in some mysterious way is transmitted by his presence. After he is convinced of this he goes away.

Hughes, Rupert, ed. Music lovers' cyclopedia; containing a pronouncing and defining dictionary of terms, instruments, etc., including a key to the pronunciation of 16 languages; many charts; an explanation of the construction of music for the uninitiated; a pronouncing biographical dictionary; the stories of the operas; and numerous biographical and critical essays by distinguished authorities. [New ed.] Garden City, N. Y., Doubleday, Page. c. '03, '12. 21+948 p. fold. tab., O. $1.50 n.

Revised edition, in a single volume, of the work formerly published in two. Editor has spared no pains to make the work one which shall meet all the demands the lay lover of music may make upon it. There are dictionaries of composers and musical terms, plots of operas, essays on special subjects, and all sorts of other matter conveniently arranged for ready reference. Diary of Princess Mary of Thule, a lovely girl, who is of sufficiently royal blood to be a pawn in the game of politics, but not important enough to take a prominent place in the world . She visits her governess in London as plain Mary Smith, and circumstances throw her in contact with Prince Milo of Crete, whom she had never before met, but whom she had been expected to marry, until a plot against him drove him from his country. The Princess recognizes Milo from his picture, but he does not know her, and the young people promptly fall in love. It only takes them a week to overcome all obstacles, clear Milo's name, and throw aside incognitos.

Index to Dates

ENDORSEMENTS

BY EDITORS OF THE PRESS

"INDEX TO DATES is something we have been looking for since the death of Pandex, published in Chicago. It should prove of great value to those who keep their own indices as a compend thereto, also as a valuable adjunct to editorial writers."—PHIL J. REID, Editor, Detroit Free Press.

"I am very much interested in your INDEX TO DATES . . . of considerable value in a newspaper's daily work."—E. C. HOPWOOD, Managing Editor, The Cleveland Plain Dealer.

"Congratulations on the splendid way in which the editor is handling it."—WILLIAM GEORGE JORDAN, Former Editor, Saturday Evening Post.

BY PUBLIC LIBRARIANS

"We are finding the INDEX TO DATES of the greatest use in our library."—MISS ESTHER NELSON, Librarian, University of Utah.

"We find them too valuable to miss a single issue."—M. H. BAXTER, Public Library, London, Ont.

"A brilliant conception, and admirably carried out."—H. GAPPY, John Rylands Library, Manchester, Eng.

"I am glad you have undertaken the INDEX TO DATES, an extremely useful working tool in our library."—JOHNSTON BRIGHAM, State Librarian, Des Moines, Iowa.

"It would be gratifying to know that every library in the country is as glad to subscribe for your most usable and helpful INDEX TO DATES."—FRANCES FORDICE, Public Library, Sedalia, Mo.

"It seems to me that every library, and every newspaper should subscribe to such a useful periodical. . . . I sincerely hope that you will find takers enough to continue the publication. I like its arrangement and wish you all success with it."—GEO. H. TRIPP, Librarian, Public Library, New Bedford, Mass.

"Already we have used it to settle difficult questions which have been put to us by members of our faculty. Many times the material is not contained in the magazine indices but this index gives us the date and we can immediately trace material in newspapers. I feel certain that college librarians appreciate your assistance in this valuable work."—JOHN ADAMS LOWE, Librarian, Williams College, Williamstown, Mass.

...NED ...

By May Sinclair

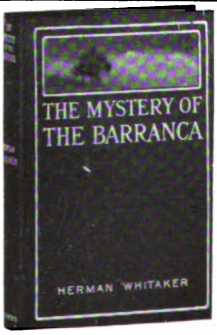
...Post 8vo. ...t. $1.35 net

With broad, clear strokes Miss Sinclair has drawn the characters of this story of love, disillusion, hope and fate in a London suburb. We know them all: love and hate them, and sympathize with them as we do with the people of Bennett's Five Towns.

NEW LEAF MILLS

By William Dean Howells

Crown 8vo. Cloth, $1.50 net

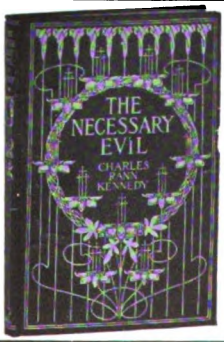


This new novel by Mr. Howells is an idyll of American country life shortly after the Mexican War, when huskings, barn-raisings, quiltings, spelling-matches, coon hunts and candy-pulls were the amusements of a homogeneous, self-sufficing community.

THE MYSTERY OF THE BARRANCA

By Herman Whitaker

Frontispiece. Post 8vo. Cloth, $1.25 net



A tale of Northern pluck and Southern love and hatred in our nearest Land of Romance—Mexico, recording the struggles and achievement of two young American engineers to develop a Mexican gold and copper mine.

THE NECESSARY EVIL

By Charles Rann Kennedy

Crown 8vo. Cloth, $1 00 net

This new play by the author of "The Servant in the House" is more stirring than any novel. Mr. Kennedy has the knack of telling the truth in a way that startles and shocks, but never repels. This play expresses just what every one thinks in his heart—about the social evil—and expresses it with extraordinary directness, cleanness, and poetic elevation.

THE PRIVATE LIFE OF HENRY MAITLAND

By Morley Roberts

This book has roused a furore of controversy in England and America because of its relentless frankness. Under a thin veil of disguise, easily penetrated by those who recognize, one of the most curious life stories of one of the premier novelists of the English school of realists is told. At one stride this book has taken a permanent place in literature as one of the most human of records. Cloth. Net $1.25

'TWIXT LAND AND SEA

By Joseph Conrad

The three stories contained in this volume touch the highest point of imaginative and literary excellence and take rank with the most mature and romantic of Joseph Conrad's work. Cloth. Net $1.25

THE STORY OF STEPHEN COMPTON

By J. E. Patterson

The author of "Love Like the Sea" and "My Vagabondage" has here produced a realistic novel of the new industrialism and the social cauldron. Through the novel runs a love story of great beauty and reality. Cloth. Net $1.25

A DREAM OF BLUE ROSES

By Mrs. Hubert Barclay

A dainty love story of a young French girl living in a sheltered English village. Its fresh, sunlit beauty makes it very attractive spring reading. Cloth. Net $1.25

THE CHEQUER-BOARD

By Lady Sybil Grant

In these stories, by the daughter of the Earl of Rosebery, Life's Chequer-board is the subject—the haphazard defects and conquests, moves and counter-moves of diverse destinies. Cloth. Net $1.20

SIMON BRANDIN

By B. Paul Neuman

By the author of "Roddles." Mr. Neuman, in this gripping story of a Russian exile, gives us a true insight into the passionate heart of a nihilist. Cloth. Net $1.20

SUCCESS

By Una L. Silberrad

By the author of "The Good Comrade," "The Lady of Dreams," etc. An intensely modern story of a young inventor; the interest turning upon a nice point of patriotism and honour. Cloth. Net $1.20

S. R. CROCKETT'S NEW NOVEL

PATSY

BY THE WELL-KNOWN AUTHOR OF "THE STICKIT MINISTER," "THE MEN OF THE MOSS-HAGS," "THE RAIDERS," ETC.

A stirring love romance of Galloway in the years of smuggling and adventure.

Full of the striking scenes, wild incidents, rapid action and constant humor with which Mr. Crockett excites and entertains his readers.

Equal to the best and the superior of most of our recent fiction. The interest of the story never flags.

Written with great power and rare skill, one needs to read but a few pages to realize that this is a story by an adept in the art of dramatic construction and literary expression.

The love story mingled with wild adventures is sweet and wholesome. Patsy is not only charming, but daring, brave and wise.

THE HAPPY WARRIOR

By A. S. M. HUTCHINSON

Ten days after American publication Mr. Hutchinson's remarkable novel was sent to press for a fifth printing. It is unquestionably the great success of the season here as it is in England.

"A. S. M. Hutchinson has scored his second big success with 'The Happy Warrior.'"—New York Times. "A romance of great strength and originality."—Chicago Tribune. "Fiction of such exceptional quality as few current writers may hope to attain."—Baltimore Sun. "A novel of exceptional merit and distinction. Few novels exist in which the characters are as viable as Mr. Hutchinson's."—Boston Transcript.

With frontispiece. 448 pages. Cloth, $1.35 net; by mail $1.46.

THE DAY OF DAYS

By LOUIS JOSEPH VANCE

Mr. Vance's new story has all the qualities which made "The Brass Bowl," etc., the popular successes that they were—absorbing mystery, startling adventure, rapid action, irrepressible humor. The action of the story takes place within a period of twelve hours! Illustrated. Cloth, $1.25 net; by mail, $1.36.

THE PARASITE

By HELEN R. MARTIN

Illustrated, $1.25 Net. Postpaid, $1.37

A Startling New Novel

By the author of "Tillie, a Mennonite Maid"

A brave and discerning presentment of a problem vital to every one, is this strong story of Joan Laird and Judge Randall, married only in name. It might well be termed "a novel of the unexpected," and is radically different from any of Mrs. Martin's former stories. Joan's unusual situation in the family of the Judge gives rise to individual and social problems of deep interest, which the author handles in a startling manner. The characters are intensely human and will live in the pages of this book as people you have known. "The Parasite" is a powerful revelation of human character and a phase of American social life.

The First Complete Biography of Sardou, Containing also Narrative Analyses of His Plays

SARDOU AND THE SARDOU PLAYS

By JEROME A. HART

Illustrated. Small 8vo. Cloth.
$2.50 Net. Postpaid, $2 65

Of the life of Sardou very little has been written in either French or English. As Mr. Hart says, "Nearly all of our knowledge of Sardou's family and childhood, we owe to the veteran dramatist himself—he confided to Adolphe Brisson, of Le Temps, some of his earliest recollections." In this thorough and exhaustive study of Sardou's life and works Mr. Hart has gathered apparently all of the available data relative to the great dramatist. It is replete with anecdotes, and tells of Sardou's youth and early struggles, his failures and eventually his great successes. The author has divided the book into three parts. The first is a biographical sketch; the second is made up of analyses of some two score of the Sardou plays—not critical but narrative analyses; and the third is devoted to the Sardou plays in the United States.

SALLY CASTLETON SOUTHERNER

By CRITTENDEN MARRIOTT

Author of "The Isle of Dead Ships," etc.

Illustrated by N. C. Wyeth. $1.25 Net. Postpaid $1.37

In this love story, brimming with action, the principal characters are Sally Castleton, the lovely daughter of a Confederate general, and Frank Radcliffe, a Northern spy, who penetrates the Southern lines on a dangerous mission. Under peculiar circumstances Sally becomes the captor of Frank. Thereafter love and duty struggle for supremacy in the heart of Sally through all of the tense moments and exciting scenes leading up to the climax at the Castleton homestead. The author has written of war times with true art, and has conceived a romance of indescribable charm in vivid contrast to the dark shadows of the Rebellion.

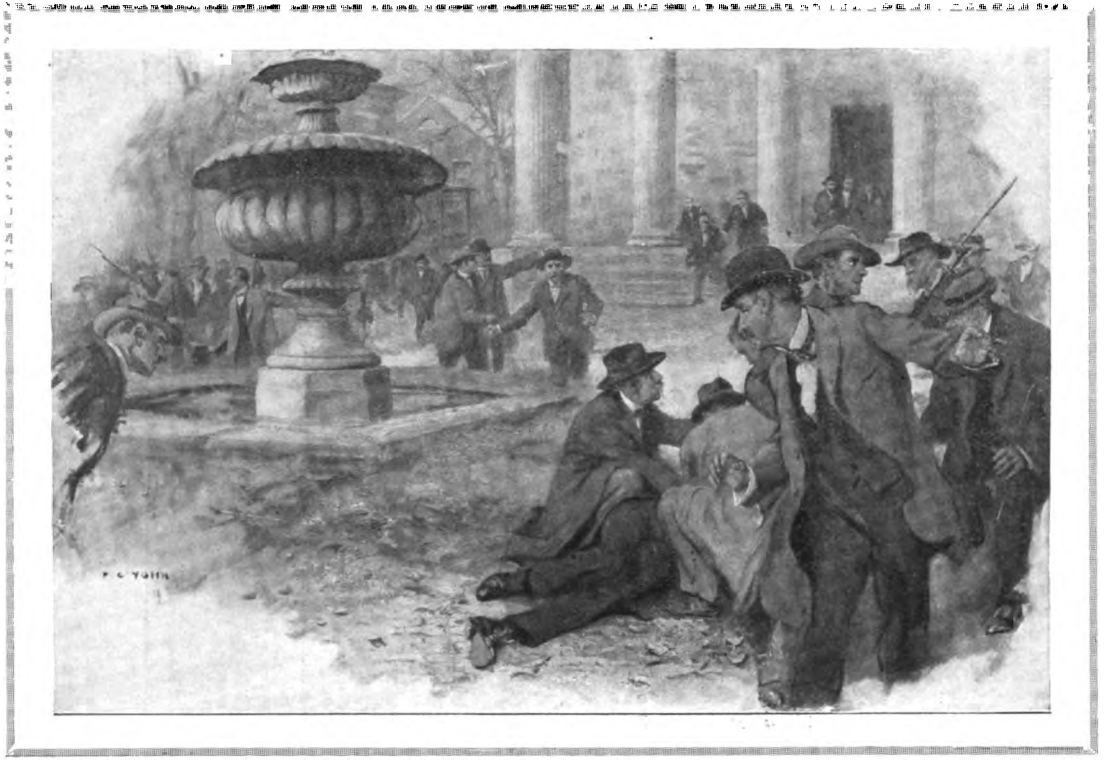
An Immediate Sensation

At last—a new note in American fiction. Hailed by noted critics as one of the great love stories of the world.

THE ETERNAL MAIDEN

GERTRUDE ATHERTON writes:	"A most interesting and graphic story. A valuable picture of a life utterly unknown to the general public. Possesses great beauty of description."

REX BEACH writes:	"One of the most unusual stories I have ever read. I enjoyed it tremendously. Poetic and beautiful."



By T. EVERETT HARRÉ

No book of recent years has received such praise from notable men and women. Promises to be the sensation of the year.

Book Chat of the Month

A veritable hail of books about the Balkan campaign, if we are to believe a London report, will shortly descend upon us. The war correspondents of the various newspapers have all come back laden with material for the inevitable volume, and the fact that they were able, for the most part, to obtain such meagre facilities for describing the actual operations of war in their respective journals has presumably made them all the more eager to "take it out" in discursive narratives of their experiences. One can only hope that their eagerness will not result in the appearance of more books on the subject than the public will want to read. Two of the ablest of the correspondents, Philip Gibbs and Bernard Grant, have resorted to the wise expedient of joining forces and producing a single book in combination. The former having been with the Bulgarian army, while the latter was with the Turkish forces, their joint work, which the firm of Methuen have published under the title, "Adventures of War with Cross and Crescent," has the advantage of presenting the story of the campaign from the point of view both of the successful and the defeated combatants. Small, Maynard & Company are the American publishers.

Another war book of peculiar interest is that of the somewhat mysterious Lieutenant Wagner, special correspondent to the London Daily Mail and New York Times, whose dispatches showed him to be capable of obtaining information which was apparently not within the reach of his brother war correspondents. This is to be issued by the house of Constable in England and Houghton Mifflin on this side. Among many other books on the same subject, we are shortly to have from Mr. Heinemann that written by Ellis Ashmead-Bartlett, who represented the Daily Telegraph at the front. On the whole, there seems little fear that the Balkan campaign will miss its due prominence in the chronicles of European warfar through any lack of zealous historians "on the spot."

The Imperial Edition of Sir Gilbert Parker's books, now being issued by Charles Scribner's Sons, has a delightfully frank preface by the author himself. He tells how he took his first collection of stories to England in 1889, and how Archibald Forbes' comment was: "Those stories, Parker — you have the best collection of titles I have ever known." The young man understood. That night he put his manuscripts, which represented a good two-years' work, on the flames until every one of them had gone up the chimney in smoke. But it was not long to the time when Henley sent him a postcard that read, "Bravo, Balzac!" The type, paper, illustrations and binding, like those of the fine collected edi-

Complaints of publishers' lack of enterprise and obtuseness to unheralded genius are as common in England as they are here, or more so, and as unfounded. Some weeks ago a Miss Kathleen O'Brian wrote to the editor of T. P.'s Weekly about a novel she had read in manuscript, entitled "The Marriage Contract," "which," in her opinion, "far surpasses H. G. Wells' book, 'Marriage,'" and which no publisher would accept for publication. Herbert Jenkins, newest of English publishers, challenged Miss O'Brian's absurd statement that publishers would not issue the works of new writers, and instanced his own list. He offered, if Miss O'Brian would send him the manuscript to which she referred, to submit it to three well-known publishers' "readers," adding, "If Miss O'Brian wishes it, I will read this story and express an opinion upon it myself, as I have no desire to hide behind the opinions of my literary advisers." Mr. Jenkins stipulates that the readers' reports, together with all the correspondence, shall be at the disposal of the editor of T. P.'s Weekly to publish if he thinks fit. The challenge has been accepted by Miss O'Brian on behalf of the author of the manuscript. There the matter at present rests, with Mr. Jenkins and his three readers sitting in solemn judgment upon this alleged masterpiece. In the meantime, we are informed, Mr. Jenkins is receiving manuscripts and letters of congratulation by every other post, showing that Mr. Jenkins is not unaware of the advertising value of his challenge.

Captain Roald Amundsen's own story of his discovery of the South Pole is of particular interest at the present moment, from the fact that the explorer is now on a lecture tour of this country, and the further fact of the recent news reporting the tragic ending of Capt. Scott's expedition. Through Amundsen's book —just published in two volumes by Lee Keedick, of New York, under the title, "The South Pole"—are many friendly references to his fellow explorer. Maps and numerous illustrations add much to this unique volume, which, with Peary's "North Pole," of 1910, completes the story of the geographical conquest of the world.

a comprehensive history of India, from the earliest times to the present day, on the model of the Cambridge Modern History. The work, as projected, will be completed in six volumes of about six hundred pages, two volumes being devoted to each of the main periods—ancient India, Mohammedan India and British India—under the editorship, respectively, of Professor E. C. Rapson, Lieutenant-Colonel T. Wolseley Haig, I.S.C., and Sir Theodore Morison, K.C.I.E. The various chapters in these sections will be entrusted to scholars who have made a special study of the period or subject; and the Syndics hope, in this way, to produce a history of the nations of India, past and present, which shall take its place as the standard work. They are indebted to the generosity of Sir Dorab Tata for the means of providing additional maps and illustrations, which will add greatly to the value and interest of the volumes.

Peculiar interest attaches to "Tradition," the title play in the new volume of one-act plays by George Middleton, author of "Embers." Though dealing with a phase of the woman question, but not strictly concerned with woman suffrage, it was produced at the Berkeley Lyceum, New York, January 24, by the Woman Suffrage Party. The author's wife, Fola La Follette, for whom the play was written, created the leading part. Henry Holt & Co. are the publishers.

"The Book of Enoch" (Oxford University Press), a new edition of R. H. Charles' volume of 1893, is so rich in new discoveries that it may well be considered a new work. This Biblical manuscript, never accepted as canonical, throws light on Christ's self-designation, "Son of Man," and is one of most important and interesting of the pseudepigrapha.

A sweet and wholesome story is this, full of young love and cheerful middle-aged philosophy. Major Buchanan is an old-school Southern gentleman, to whom the young people come for advice or sympathy or congratulations, as the case may be. Andrew the Glad is really Andrew the Sad until the end of the story, when his conscience permits him to feel that he has a right to the love of Caroline Darrow Brown, whose father came to the old Southern town a "carpet-bagger," and literally stole the love of her mother, who died in giving her birth. The people in the little town cherished their bitterness toward the carpet-bagger until Caroline came, some twenty years after, orphaned and alone. It is thus the Major receives her:

"Child, Matilda has had a heart trap ready for you ever since you were born, in case she sighted you in the open. It's baited with a silver rattle, doll babies, sugar plums, the ashes of twenty year's roses, the fragrance of every violet she has seen, and lately an aggregation of every eligible masculine heart in this part of the country has been added. She caught you fair—walk in and help yourself, it's all yours."

Andrew's father, known sometimes as Andrew the Glad and at others the man of smiles, gambled away his home—his wife and son—and ended it all with a pistol and a smile on his face. The shadow of the past is on these young people; especially is this true of Andrew, a fine product of disastrous circumstances. He has built bridges in Panama, tunnelled a mountain, and then sat down by a construction campfire at night and written a poem or a play. A romantic figure indeed, and one calculated to appeal to the imagination of a young girl.

The girl who shares the honor of heroine with Caroline is Phoebe Donelson, a splendid type of the modern Southerner. She is an alert newspaper reporter, interested in the problems of the day, but at heart as domestic and loving as she can be. She will be guilty of a sharp epigram at the same time that her heart is all aflutter at the sight of newborn twins. David Kildare is her glad young man, whose merry nature and charming method of lovemaking compensate for a life that is more or less an idle one.

The readers who want a real love story will get two real love stories if they buy this book, and will also feel better for having met the genial Major, who, after all, has the center of the stage to the very end. F. M. Holly

'Twixt Land and Sea.*

"'Twixt Land and Sea," by Joseph Conrad, contains three stories: "A Smile of Fortune," "The Secret Sharer," "Freya of the Seven Isles." Conrad writes of lands known to no other writer, fertile and beautiful islands of the tropics, barren islets, a sea so hard and blue that it looks solid, a sea "fit to turn your hair gray only alooking at it," or "a straight line of the flat shore, joined to the stable sea, edge to edge with a perfect and unmarked closeness." And the civilized people who come to live in these barbaric lands—well, really, you know, they act in an unusual fashion! Their lives are florid, and their deeds most unexpected. Yet, as you read the stories, you have not the slightest doubt that truth is pictured for you.

Take "The Secret Sharer." A captain was suddenly called upon to take a strange ship, bound from a southern island, on a long voyage. The night before the start he took the first watch himself to have a chance to "get acquainted" with his vessel during the quiet hours of the night. Leaning over the rail in a comfortable leisure, sleeping-suited, bare-footed, smoking, he was startled to see a naked swimmer alongside, resting, holding to the rope ladder which had not been drawn in. The swimmer climbed on deck and revealed himself as a Conway lad who, while acting as mate on a nearby ship, killed a sailor. The deed was justifiable, according to sea ethics, and resulted in saving a ship and crew who would otherwise have perished; but the captain, a doddering old idiot, was about to hand the mate over to trial in a court of law. The young fellow, knowing the futility of attempting to explain the situation to a set of landlubbers in a jury box, flung himself overboard, intending to swim until he drowned. The pause by the ship was pure chance. A sudden sympathy and understanding leaped into existence between the swimmer and the captain of the ocean-bound ship. The captain concealed the fugitive in his tiny cabin for days with the greatest difficulty. His curious actions gained him the reputation of insanity among the crew. Finally, he drove his ship horribly near a group of unknown tropical islands, where there might be settlements, and arranged for the fugitive to slip over the side of the vessel and swim to the largest island. The other two stories are equally far from the usual.

The Shadow.*

"Never-fail Blake," Deputy Police Commissioner of New York, despiser of Bertillon tomfoolery and follower of the "rough-neck," "third-degree" methods of the older school of detective science, is slated to be bounced. Led on by a woman with whom he had once made the mistake of falling in love, he starts on the trail of Binhart, a forger, who has succeeded for months in evading the police. The clue given him by his superiors is false; but Blake, keen to retrieve his fading reputation falls for it.

Then follows the worldwide chase, which makes up the book. The false trail leads to Montreal and Winnipeg, but, in Chicago, Blake strikes the real one. Thence, missing his man always by hours, he dogs him to Denver, St. Louis, New Orleans, San Francisco, Vancouver; then, by following steamships, to Yokohama, Nagasaki, Shanghai, Hongkong and Macao. Everywhere his routine is much the same; his knowledge of the underworld is thorough; his acquaintance there broad. In Chicago, for instance, he at once "went down the line," making his rounds stolidly and systematically, first visiting a West Side faroroom and casually interviewing the "stools" of Custom House Place and South Clark Street, and then dropping in at the Café Acropolis, in Halsted Street, and lodging houses in even less savory quarters. He duly canvassed every likely dive, every "melina," every gambling house and yegg hang out. He engaged in leisurely games of pool with stonegetters and gopher men. He visited bucketshops and barrooms, and dingy little Ghetto cafés. He "buzzed" tipsters and floaters and mouthpieces. He fraternized with till tappers and single-drillers. He always made his inquiries after Binhart seem accidental, a case apparently subsidiary to two or three others which he kept always to the foreground.

And at Macao, thanks to a little gurgling, dolllike painted lady, who smilingly offered to kill Binhart for him "for £2000 in gold," Blake meets Binhart—and nurses a bullet in his leg for a week in a Hongkong hospital. For that matter, the episode of the little English-speaking lady, with her carmine lips and baby-blue eyes, and the three Chinese cutthroats out to do up Blake, is breathless all the way through.

After a week the trail is cold, but Blake follows it: Saigon, Bangkok, Singapore, Penang, where the first new clue comes; Brindisi, Corfu, Trieste and Naples, where he sees Binhart—Binhart leaving the room by the window, the casement with him. Then Marseilles, Panama and twice across South America, gunrunners and fever playing there their various parts. For a week Binhart again is in his grasp; the fever releases him. Meanwhile, months have passed; fever, hardship, drink and mental collapse have left Blake a wrecked man. But "Never-fail" Blake dies hard; he never gives up; and he does get Binhart—but that is years later and within sight of Madison Square.

Mr. Stringer knows the shady side of civilization, and has a knack of flashing a description in few phrases. The cover cut is a striking one, by the way, but just what has the clean-cut young man there depicted got to do with either Blake or Binhart?

THE HEART OF THE HILLS.*

Again Mr. Fox leads his readers into Kentucky, the State of contrasts, within whose boundaries lie mysterious-hearted mountains side by side with smiling, fertile, sun-swept plains. And he shows us the no less great contrast in the people of the same State—the sullen, silent mountaineers, with their primitive code of honor, their disregard for human life, their honesty and sincerity; and the easy-going, jovial Blue Grass riders and revellers. The last years of the nineteenth and the opening decade of the twentieth century is the background of time which Mr. Fox has chosen for the human story in this his newest book. In those years, Kentucky and her people were changing fast, and just as respect for law, for learning, for the graces of life, made their way slowly into the mountain fastnesses and into the sullen hearts of the people there, so the easy, good nature of the farmers and horse raisers of the plains gave way to sullen lawlessness at the urge of the coming of Big Business in the Tobacco Trust and its encroachments.

Four young people, a mountaineer boy and girl, and a couple of aristocratic young cousins of old Kentucky plantation stock, are the chief human figures in this story, which is the story of the development of a Commonwealth through a troublous part of its history, just as much as it is the story of these four young hearts in their growth from childhood to manhood and womanhood.

When we first meet them all, Jason and Mavis Hawn, of the fighting feudist family, are at home in their native mountains, and Majorie and Gray Pendleton have followed Colonel Pendleton, Gray's father, into these mountains when he comes to buy coal-bearing land, comes to buy, unconscious of the cheat in the transaction, Jason's home soil for a small fraction of its real value. The children meet and gaze at each other as beings from another world. Then we meet them again when the fortunes of life lead the young mountaineers down into the plains to struggle for knowledge, for everything that would brighten the barrenness of their narrow lives. The natural sturdy democracy of childhood brings the four together as friends, and though each pair of cousins was naturally destined to complete each other's lives, Nature crosses wires for a while and tangles the four young hearts in a web of conflicting emotions. Finally, the woman's instinct of the mountain girl brings light into the darkness, and each comes to his own true mate at the end. Back of this human story is the big canvas of a State's struggle from the old order to the new, and it is made very real for us through the reality of the men and women who take part in it. Seldom has there been a young hero of recent fiction so humanly appealing, so convincingly alive as is Jason Hawn, the sullen mountain boy, in his slow awakening to the real meaning of things. When at last he goes back to his own people to help lead them onward in the struggle for industrial independence, one takes leave of him with true regret.

Sally Castleton was a Southerner and a Confederate general's daughter in the '60s. She lived in a big white mansion house in Virginia, and was attended by dusky servitors, but none of these things could prevent her falling in love with a Northerner. He came dashing dramatically in upon a council of war that was being held in Sally's own parlor, and Sally, from an upper room, whither she had been banished by the domineering Yankee general who had requisitioned her mansion, saw his approach and approved of him against her will.

FROM "SALLY CASTLETON, SOUTHERNER," BY CRITTENDEN MARRIOTT

J. B. Lippincott Co.

The reason why she had to stay in the upstairs room with her sister, 'Genie, was that the general's men had found a dead Confederate horse in the stable and fancied the sisters knew something of the rider. As a matter of fact, the general's suspicions were not misplaced. The girls had hidden a military messenger, a fiery youth, by name Philip Byrd (and 'Genie's lover), in a large stove in the hallway. Fortunately for 'Genie, Yankee shrewdness did not penetrate the mysteries of a stove whose exterior even was uninviting and unsuggestive except to those who despair, and Philip could sit calm among the soot and ashes and hear his enemies' plans to boot.

With this situation, "Sally Castleton, Southerner," begins, and the tale never grows less exciting, the men less dashing, nor the girls less sweetly spirited. Sally, poor dear, had a hard time. She hates to, but she has to spy upon her spy of a lover all the way to Richmond, and how the poor dear's notions of love and duty and patriotism do get muddled! But all goes well in the end, though General Castleton, C. S. A., may have said some words that are not chronicled between the book's red covers when he heard of the match. 'Genie, of course, is happy with her Philip, and no questions asked.

"Sally Castleton" has a plot and a neat and artful one—never too complicated for a languid mind, nor too obvious for a sharp one. No campaigns in military terms annoy, and few pins are stuck in war maps. It is as well. A novelist's history is stupid when it is not inaccurate, and there is not enough of it in "Sally Castleton" to be either. The illustrations are models—simple, strong and unusually sure of composition, well worthy alike of Sally's crinoline and Radcliffe's chevrons.

PATSY.*

Admirers of S. R. Crockett and his Scottish romances will be delighted to learn that "Patsy," his new novel, just issued by the Macmillan Company, is written in his best style, and is set in Galloway, the district of Scotland which figures in his most popular books.

It tells the tale of how, a hundred years ago, George of England sent his troops up into bonny Scotland to impress recruits by force; of how certain brave lads escaped through the connivance of a clever girl; how the young princely scapegrace at the head of the press gang coveted the fair heroine and kidnapped her in princely scapegrace fashion, and how she is rescued, in turn, by the lad she had just done as much for.

Then Patsy—short for Patricia—goes up to London to visit a lady of noble family and connections, and quickly becomes the town toast. She deserves the homage she gets, if we are to believe she was really as beautiful, witty, daring and alluring as Mr. Crockett vividly portrays her. She has many, many suitors, a whole line of princely ones among them, and very nearly becomes a princess herself. She graphically describes her Prince Eitel in a letter written home to one Stair Garland: "Well, he is a good soldier — has fought a lot against Napoleon, and will fight again. To look at? Oh, he is big and round and rosy, with yellow moustaches and cheeks like apples, nice plump red apples. He goes 'Hum-hum-hum' in his throat when he speaks to me, and he always kisses my hand. Generally, he calls me 'Most Noble Lady,' and then I wonder how many hundred yards I could give him and beat him in a mile-race along the sands."

But, of course, Patsy decides not to become a princess, and returns home to perform deeds of rescue again. There is excitement and adventure a-plenty before the high-spirited and high-handed heroine confesses to Stair that it is he whom she loves most in the world, and wrings, in turn, from that taciturn and obstinate youth a similar confession directed against herself.

Patsy is adorable from first to last, and along dozens of lines. And the recounting of her adventures, together with the pictures of life at the time, from the venturesome ways of the local smugglers to the gayeties of London court circles, and with the many vivid characterizations with which Mr. Crockett has crowded his pages, all handled with the skill of Mr. Crockett, combine to make a romance such as is going to bring pleasure to a large number of readers.

THE NIGHT RIDERS.*

With the serious handicaps of a college education and Eastern riding trousers, John Tresler—tall, strong and dauntless—starts his career at Mosquito Bend Ranch, marking his first day by a quarrel with the powerful and bullying foreman, Jake. Puzzle—find the hero. At the point when words run hottest and fingers seek steel, there flashes into view a white gown, worn by Diane Marbolt, daughter of the ranch owner with whom Tresler has contracted to stay three years to learn the business of ranching. Puzzle—find the heroine. Since no other woman appears in the book, the latter problem is comparatively simple. Not so the detection of the villain—that mysterious leader of a band of cattle-thieving night riders, that elusive "Red Mask," terror of the countryside.

The unravelling of this mystery is but one of Tresler's cares; his constant watchfulness is needed to protect Diane against Jake's unwelcome lovemaking, and, strangely enough, against her father, Julian Marbolt, blind and hideous, small, yet marvellously strong; self-controlled, yet wickedly cruel.

Thick with adventure, the story is a typical Ridgwell Cullum tale, peopled with cowboy types. "Enthusiasm," says the author, "is the mainspring of a cowboy's life. There are no half measures with him. He will play poker till he has had the doubtful satisfaction of seeing his last cent pass into somebody else's pocket; he will drink on the most generous scale, and is ever ready to quarrel. Before all things," he adds, "the cowboy is a horseman."

Tresler's own mare, unconquered till Jake treacherously gives her to the newcomer to break, and sees that apparent impossibility accomplished, takes him a desperate run one day—a mad, blind, endless "bolt." By chance the adventure leads to a strange hut, high on a protected cliff, a spot destined to see later the climax of the tale.

Any detail of the plot is impossible, but the reader is promised a surprise or two, a very satisfactory love affair and plenty of good fighting.

That Hallie Erminie Rives appreciates the strain of old Virginia blood in her veins is clearly apparent in "The Valiants of Virginia," for the book, above and underneath, and through its running love story, is a monument to the traditions and picturesque sensibilities of the F. F. V.

The story has to do with one "Vanity" Valiant, the pampered son of a New York corporation magnate, who, years after his father's death, suddenly deprived of fortune, learns for the first time that his father was a Virginian and that there is still the homestead down there, deserted for some thirty years. So he packs up his bulldog and other few remaining effects and returns to his inheritance.

This is where the Virginia atmosphere is worked up strong. Young Valiant, bent on idyllically returning to the soil, finds an old house, fairly reeking of ante-bellum days, picks up some old negro servants, also still reminiscent of the ante-bellum period; at once meets the lovely Shirley Dandridge, of the red-bronze hair and the blue, blue eyes, and is saved from death by her. A moccasin snake bites his foot, there in the remote woodland, far from aid, and there is nothing for Shirley to do but resort to the primitive method and suck out the poison with her lips. She does it.

There is much that is mysterious about the duel which Valiant's father —"Beauty" Valiant—had fought over some unknown lady of the neighborhood, immediately before he left it forever. There is also much that is mysterious about why Shirley's mother, a soft-voiced, dark-eyed, gentle-mannered lady, who wears soft gray gowns with old lace at the throat, swoons so easily at the mention of certain passages in "Lucile," and always shuts herself up in her room on the fourteenth of May and smells cape jessamine. Many things happened long ago, and they got twisted in the happening—with the assistance of the undiabolic old major with apoplectic tendencies, that is, he has them now, not when the things were happening—and they have got much worse now through reticences and misunderstandings.

The course of true love finds many rocks and bumpy places; but all to the accompaniment of such beautiful nightingale singing, such golden old Virginia moonlight, that it is hard to pity the lovers too much, after all, while they are yet on the rocks. And, in the end, everything is satisfactorily explained, leaving everyone too happy for words.

THE GIRLS FOUND HIM BURIED IN HIS TOMES

FROM "ANDREW THE GLAD" BY MARIA THOMPSON DAVIESS

Which, however, conveys no impression of the atmosphere, the local color which is as much a part of the book as the story itself. The style is distinctly Hallie-Erminie-Rives-ish, and flows mellifluously along, caught up with graceful garlands of liquid bunches of words. For instance, Valiant is engaged in calling up the vision of the absent Shirley:

> "For a breath her face would flush suddenly before him, like a live thing; then it would mysteriously fade and elude him, though he clenched his hands on the arms of his chair in the fierce mental effort to recall it. Only the intense blue of her eyes, the tawny sweep of her hair—these and the touch of her, the consciousness of her warm and vivid fragrance, remained to wrap all his senses in a mist woven of gold and fire."

And, again, when Shirley brushes her hair, the operation is by no means a commonplace, every-day affair as handled by Miss Rives:

"She slipped on a pink shell-shaded dressing gown of slinky silk, with a riot of azaleas scattered in the weave, and then, dragging a chair before the open window, drew aside the light curtain and began to brush her hair. She parted the lustrous mass with long sweeps of her white arm, forward first over one shoulder, then over the other. The silver brush smoothed the lighter ashen ripples that netted and fretted into a fine amber lace, till they lay, a rich, warm mahogany like red earth. The coppery whorls eddied and merged themselves, showing under glints of russet and dun-gold, curling and clasping in flame-tinted furrows like a living field of gold under a silver harrow. Outside the window the stars lay on the lapis-lazuli sky like white flower petals on still deep water, and in the pasture across the hedges she could see the form of Selim, her chestnut hunter, standing ghostly, like an equine sentinel."

There is an abundance of very good negro dialect of the old school, and a harmoniously accompanying sprinkling of superstition which plays its little part in the story; a great deal of nature description and talk about birds and flowers; a touch of history, and an effective use of certain picturesque old customs which survive, as the tournament in which the modern knights contest to see whose lady may be crowned Queen of Beauty.

Altogether, "The Valiants of Virginia" is a love story so full of romance and poetical action that it is safe to prophesy for it a full quota of delighted readers.

THE FLIRT.*

Hedrick Madison is the most ingeniously diabolic child that ever wove a novelist's plot for him. If you can forget that he is entirely too clever for his years and enjoy his performances for what they are worth, you will be getting full value for the price of admission to the pages of "The Flirt." Hedrick is chorus and villain and the comic element—all in one. He reads his sisters like so many crystals, and he voices his annoying revelations at dramatic moments only. He is wily and clever. He will plot for days—little boy plots, carried out with the ingenuity of a Dumas hero—and suddenly make life one long terror for his family. Booth Tarkington has no sympathy for him—not the slightest trace. He lays bare all his boyish faults, though all in Hedrick's own finished style, which is strangely akin to the best type of conversational journalese. And he describes him so accurately that the boy is almost human, in spite of him. To most readers, Hedrick will be quite as interesting as the Flirt herself.

The story is laid in a little town of the Middle West, and again the author dissects as he describes. The room in which Valentine Corliss, the returning native, first sees Cora, the Flirt, is as vivid in the reader's mind as some actual room; and there are clear-cut moments of description and intuition combined that, as in one's own life, make together lasting impressions and images. One remembers accurately Hedrick's lair in a barn, which was reached by a subterranean tunnel and a perilous climb over back fences and hay lofts. His broken-down furniture, the extraordinary library he had gathered, and his private hoard of smokers' materials, consisting of a pile of cigarette papers cut from newspapers, and a jar of sweet fern, make a scene not readily forgotten. In the same class are the two twins that Laura, the worth-while sister of the Flirt, has her real conversations with the man she finally marries. Surprised both times on her knees by a horrible coal grate dating from the '70s, and covered with dust and grime, she is as lovely and appealing as the author would have her be. Cora Madison, like Hedrick, is rather too good to be true. She is too beautiful, too hard, too mean, too callous to be quite convincing, particularly as she is pictured with Mr. Tarkington's latest manner—as if with light, firm pencil lines. But she is a wonderfully true study, albeit exaggerated, and truer in many ways than most women will admit. The perfectly natural consequence of her wilful playing with the affections of every man she meets and can ensnare are what make the book. There is no need to describe them. They are engrossing enough as they are told. And the quiet sister, Laura, who is seven times the woman Cora is, is happy, in the end; the reader, who is sure to want her to be happy, no matter what happens to Cora, or to the poor boy that she literally drove to drink, or the adventurer from abroad who almost tamed her, will be quite satisfied with the ending. His only regret will be that Cora gets a better fate than she deserves.

THE DRAGOMAN.*

The majority of readers, occupied day in and day out with the more or less prosaic business of life, have occasionally a very natural hunger for something big, exciting, pulsating. This demand meets with a supply which affords some degree of satisfaction. Certain stories and novels, abounding in tropical imagination, if not always in profound knowledge of life, furnish even the jaded citizen or his staid wife a near-participation in the purple-dyed and glorious orgies of romance.

"The Dragoman," by George K. Stiles, for instance. Imagine John Randall, a stalwart young Englishman, deep-bronzed to the likeness of an Egyptian, idly lying on the deck of his Nile boat. A passing steamer gives him a glimpse of a tall, slender English maiden of ravishing beauty; his heart is fired with love. Managing, shortly after, to get aboard the aforesaid steamer, he makes away with the native officer in command of the ship and, being, fortunately, familiar with the native language, manners and religious observances, assumes the officer's identity.

Consequently, there devolves upon him the control of a serious uprising of the followers of Allah against the "alien dogs." He is, naturally, in a tremendously dangerous position, which grows more desperate as the steamer, carrying the captive beauty and a load of contraband rifles, proceeds up the Nile beyond the pale of civilization. But with the aid of the "diamond-hearted crescent," symbol of Allah's vice-gerent, which he had taken from the defunct Egyptian, he comes out victorious through many "hairbreadth 'scapes in the imminent breach."

The girl, though, throughout the tale, believing her protector an Egyptian, falls madly in love with his compelling and enchanting personality. The scene in which their mutual declaration of love bursts forth is well calculated to make even the blasé reconsider the possibilities of being stimulated. At the very close of the book the conspiracy is quashed, the crescent is restored to the Khedive, the beautiful girl learns the real identity of her loved one, and the reader can practically hear the well-known and ever-welcome chimes.

GEORGE HELM.*

With the publication of each of the several manuscripts left by David Graham Phillips, we feel more deeply the loss sustained by the public in his unhappy death by the hand of an insane stranger. Had the writer lived, "George Helm" would probably not have been published in its present form. The beginning is carefully worked out and the characters developed, but the latter part of the story is merely sketched in. The hero is the kind beloved by both writer and public—a man's man, which, being interpreted, means a man adored by women. George Helm concentrated the attention of a Middle West city upon himself when he arrived from the country, by wearing an astonishing set of red whiskers. It was a hideous shade of red, the color that brick walls are painted in the spring. It grew, we are told, patchily. In some spots it was straight, in other parts curly. It is to be expected that George Helm should be known through town, and if he was known as "the boy with the whiskers," at least known he was.

Politics in this town, as in many towns, was all one party tagged with two names—Democratic and Republican. It was arranged that the candidate for circuit judge who wore the Republican tag should be elected, but the Democratic division went through the form of putting up a man "to make things interesting for the populace, and to give them the feeling that they were sovereign citizens." In a hilarious mood, they put up the red whiskers. Once nominated, the wearer shaved, and George Helm emerged from behind the burning bush. One look at the serious face, revealed at last, convinced the jovial Democrats that they had made a mistake. The succeeding weeks confirmed their opinion. The long-armed, awkward young chap hired a "buggy," and started through the State telling the farm folks what he had found out—while hiding behind whiskers—about the one party with two labels. He did not get into office—not this time—but it took the cleverest crooked ballot counting work that had ever been necessary in that State. When it was over the party wiped its sweating forehead with its bandana and vowed that George Helm must go under. But he didn't.

There is also the clever beginning and sketchy ending of a love story; an astonishing proposal of marriage that sounds truer than the fictional model proposal; an interview with her father; and a few—all too few—of those charming bits of homely philosophy which we have come to expect in Mr. Phillips' stories.

THE THREE BRONTËS.*

"Will it do to say anything more about Chaucer?" writes Lowell, and after expressing a modest doubt, proceeds with one of his most charming essays on the ground that "one is always the better for a walk in the morning air—a medicine which may be taken over and over again, without any sense of sameness or any failure of its invigorating quality." With the same expression of doubt, but without the promise of invigoration, Miss May Sinclair prefaces her book on "The Three Brontës."

It is a depressing story—that of the Brontës—as Mrs. Gaskell, in her life of Charlotte Brontë, long ago pointed out. Miss Sinclair accentuates the tragic note. A motherless parsonage at Haworth, set in the midst of a desolate moorland; a drinking, opium-eating brother, who developed consumption; three sisters more or less endowed, or accursed, with genius and varying styles of temperament—such is the fundamental material of the tragedy. Various flittings of the sisters back and forth between London, Brussels and Haworth, in restless striving to work out their "destinies"; numerous poems and novels which apparently failed to bring gladness, though Charlotte's productions won for her considerable fame; the brother, Branwell's death, which killed Emily and thereby hastened the end of poor Anne—so develops the story.

All this has afforded previous biographers ample scope for much baseless theorizing, much misinterpretation, much lying, which Miss Sinclair sets about to refute. The final impression of Anne, the author of "Agnes Grey" and "The Tenant of Wildfell Hall," is as follows "Of these tragic Brontës, the most tragic, the most pitiful, the most mercilessly abused by destiny, was Anne," a pretty, delicate, timid little thing, "broken on the wheel of life," "cheated of its desire." Of Emily, Miss Sinclair says: "You may call her what you will—pagan, pantheist, transcendentalist, mystic and worshipper of earth—she slips from all your formulas. Hers is an attitude of tolerance that is only not tenderness, because her acceptance of life and of all that lives, is unqualified and unstinting. It is too lucid and too high for pity."

Naturally, the subject of most consideration in Miss Sinclair's book is Charlotte, than whom "no woman who ever wrote was more criticised, more spied upon, more lied about." The conclusions of Mrs. Oliphant, G. H. Lewes, M. Dimnet and others are attacked at various points with clearness and vigor, if not always with absolute convincingness. The latter would, perhaps, be too much to ask. It is not easy at this date to disprove that Charlotte Brontë was overconcerned with seeking a husband, or inordinately temperamental. Nor can one make it perfectly obvious she never entertained an illicit passion for M. Héger in Brussels. But in dealing with literary influences, Miss Sinclair is on firmer ground. Throwing over the idea that Charlotte's works were the product of this or that "influence," she shows that the novelist, like her own "Shirley," "was born fifty years before her time," a woman with a brain and soul, who rebelled against the sorrows, limitations and conventions of the world, and out of herself strove in her works to depict, to combat them.

The world in Charlotte's time was no place for such a woman, and her way was strewn with woes and obstacles; but in the words of Miss Sinclair, "Nothing that her biographers have done (when they have done their worst) can destroy or even diminish the effect her life gives of unity, of fitness, of profound and tragic harmony."

THE PARTY BOOK.*

Have you children or young folks for whom you give parties? Must you decorate tables for receptions, teas, or other social events? The "Party Book" will be your friend at such times. It is divided into four sections: I. Invitations, table setting and menus; II. Decorations; III. Refreshments; IV. Games. The first section gives reproductions of correct invitations for all occasions and information on all connected matters, even to such fine points as the etiquette of sending invitations to families in mourning after one month to social events other than dinners or luncheons and the concurrent obligation of the bereaved to decline said invitations. It is interesting to know that a hostess must send a separate invitation to each of a group of brothers, but may economize by sending a common invitation to sisters. The difference between a luncheon table setting and dinner table setting is expounded. The menus vary from those suitable for a formal dinner to suggestions for a simple theatre supper. A six-page table of sauces, stuffings, etc., suitable for combination with different meats and fish, is the most alluring portion of the book.

Centerpieces, Jack Horner pies for distributing gifts and favors, home-made candle shades, place cards, decorations for special holidays and for special anniversaries are described and pictured. An entire chapter is devoted to Jack Horner pies—a form of decoration especially loved by children. Four chapters give receipts for novelties in cakes, salads, sandwiches, fancy bouillons, hot dishes for evening suppers, ice creams, ices and beverages. Dainty ways of serving are pictured. These viands are suitable for teas, receptions and evening companies. The chapters on games are a boon to one who entertains very young folks. Both old and novel games are described. An appendix is made up of tables for the convenience of the hostess in working out color schemes and favors. Information is furnished regarding flowers of the months, birthstones, state flowers, national flowers, symbolism of flowers, national colors, legal holidays, English holidays, college colors, nicknames of States, and Hallowe'en stunts. Some of the suggestions, especially in the matter of table decoration, are too elaborate (though not expensive), and take too much time in preparation to appeal to any sensible woman; yet others will seem to the proverbial busy housewife both practical and attractive.

THE CIVIC THEATRE.*

Mr. Mackaye sounds the keynote of a lofty ideal in his latest book. Incomplete and sketchy as any book must be which is made up from lectures, magazine articles and loose notes, this volume is nevertheless so filled with the concentration of a definite idea that its content gives it the unity its form lacks. The problem of public recreation is already engrossing those minds which, on the pinions of hopeful ideals, float upward to the vision of a time when the awakening of the civic conscience shall have provided to each man the leisure which he needs to become a well-rounded human being, not merely a work machine. Then will come—and it is well to be prepared for it—the need of self-government of a people in the activities of their leisure. In its influence on his character, the play of the adult is as important as is the play of the child. But only lately have the Anglo-Saxon nations come to understand that a wise public ordering of the leisure pastimes of the people will not in any way hamper their sturdy independence, but will even help, possibly, to awaken their minds to a demand for better regulation of working conditions. In Mr. Mackaye's own words:

> Fundamentally, then, the Civic Theatre Idea is concerned with the problem of leisure; to extirpate the most baneful habit of mature human beings, the habit of "killing time." Its object is to fill time, not to kill it; to refill it to overflowing with that quality of charmed eternity which it always possesses in normal childhood . . . when a summer's afternoon may pass like an instant, yet seem an eon of joy in retrospect.

In several chapters, Mr. Mackaye shows the crying need for the redemption of the leisure of our people, shows how so many other lines of human activity have now come to be understood as matters of public concern, but that the entertaining of the people by means of the arts has been left entirely to commercial private enterprise, and is, therefore, misused and abused for commercial purposes. He paints the baneful effects of this dulling of the public conscience to a problem of which it has not yet, in the English-speaking countries, understood the significance. The lack of understanding of the civic importance of well-filled leisure, of the joy of life through art, is intensified by the fact that in our country the civic leaders, their public-spirited students of economics, who give their time and their strength to the service of mankind, seem to let their vision stop short of the realm of art. And the Soul with the vision of what art can mean at its highest is, in the Anglo-Saxon countries at least, strangely devoid of the civic conscience, of an understanding of the fact that art is an inherent part of the life of the people—or should be if it would reach its best fulfillment. To such souls Art seems to stand on a pillar in the desert, high and pure above the strife of daily existence. Yet, argues Mr. Mackaye—and his words will find an echo in many a heart—the highest purpose of art is to bring beauty into our daily existence, to become a part of that existence.

And it is through the drama, the art which is eminently social, communal in character, needing for its interpretation and for its enjoyment the co-operation of great masses of people, that Mr. Mackaye sees the coming reconciliation of these now divorced ideals. With rich flow of words, the fire of which carries the reader along as on a swift current of burning conviction, the writer draws an alluring picture of the great Civic Theatre which may be a dream or perhaps even a possibility of a happier future—the great Civic Theatre which will be the center of a community's well-ordered leisure as the university is its center of learning, the city hall its center of governmental activities. It would seem almost a crime to attempt to describe in other words the ideas that Mr. Mackaye clothes in the beauty of language which is so pre-eminently his gift. The reader must turn to the book itself. And the book will bring a keen joy to many of those who are beginning to realize that the problems of leisure go hand-in-hand with the problems of work in this world of problems in which we live to-day.

MODERN PHILANTHROPY.*

Mr. Allen has classified and studied 6000 letters of appeal received by Mrs. Harriman in the space of two years. He presents the results of this analysis: First, descriptions of the different varieties of appeals; second, criticism of the present method of giving; third, a constructive plan for a national clearing house for givers; fourth, a magna charta for givers, that is, an exposition of the rights of benefactors in choosing and safeguarding their alms. Mr. Allen feels that individual and local needs should be attended to by local organizations, religious debts should be raised by the members of the particular church or denominations, leaving our millionaires free to give toward nationwide needs, like child labor, anti-tuberculosis, etc. These needs he groups under 8 headings: (1) To universalize present knowledge and its use; (2) Search and research for new knowledge; (3) Salvage —relief and unremunerative aid; (4) Salvage —investment with chance of profit; (5) Four per cent. to six per cent. investments, combining public service and private profit; (6) To correct individual and social maladjustments; (7) To utilize by-products; (8) To expose and stop fraud. Any amount of money may be philanthropically invested in such agencies without danger of pauperizing the beneficiaries.

One section of the book is devoted to instruction in the art of presenting needs in an efficient fashion when appealing for assistance. This part is especially helpful to social workers writing reports and raising funds for benevolences. The suggested clearing house would follow up all appeals, exposing fraudulent stories and referring to proper agencies legitimate requests. It would also disseminate information concerning charities. Such a clearing house would be advantageous not only to benefactors and beneficiaries, but those of us who frequently discover unfortunates involved in situations from which we ourselves are powerless to extricate them.

We gather from this book that those men and women who, by saving their pennies have accumulated a few surplus millions, have great difficulty in learning the most pressing needs of the community. As an alternative to Mr. Allen's complicated and costly programme, we respectfully submit the suggestion that each millionaire bestow alms upon those people who have assisted in the accumulation of his fortune. Thus a philanthropist who acquired his money by providing employees with work twelve hours a day, seven days in the week, might endow an old-age-at-forty pension fund; one who has grown rich on pills or tonics might establish hospitals and drug-victim asylums; one who bought land cheap and sold it dear might build model tenements for the poor; while one who wrecked industries might support the widows and orphans of suicides.

MONACO AND MONTE CARLO.*

The reason for Mr. Smith's plural title for a singular subject—singular in more senses than one—appears from his book. The average reader probably thinks first of wicked Monte Carlo and, lest he should think that is all that the principality of Monaco boasts, the author sharply differentiates it from the latter otherwise virtuous domain.

As a matter of fact, unknown Monaco is fully as interesting as the great gambling resort that everybody knows something about. Its history forms a unique chapter in European diplomacy, which Mr. Smith allows several chapters to detail. Its present prince, Albert I., is a man of individuality, whose hobby, oceanography—especially deep-sea exploration—has made very great contributions to knowledge; and the tiny state he rules is, in all except its Casino, a model of good government, reflecting economic prosperity and individual welfare.

Part II. is devoted—a dozen chapters or more—to Monte Carlo, the Casino there and its management; the government's share in the winnings of the gaming tables, and what these revenues amount to; the frequenters who play (and who don't), and their mathematically impossible "systems" and strange superstitions, and the other attractions of Monte Carlo.

morous and stimulating comments, is bewildering. One must be an aristocrat of letters like the author himself to find his way through it unmisled.

In these 660-odd pages (which, nevertheless, do not make an unwieldy book) the author, comprehensive and versatile as he was, seeks smilingly to conceal how the yoke of comprehensiveness pinches. Or, rather, it might be more accurate to say that he discerns how difficult it is to be panoramic and Lang-like at the same time. It was a well-nigh hopeless task, since one cannot briefly touch only the high lights and yet poke around into corners in a leisurely and curious way. But Lang often seeks to do so, and, consequently it is difficult to keep one's bearings. Often, in his summing up of a man, however, he strikes a neat balance in his phrasing at least. He says of Shakespeare, for instance, that, despite the inevitable stains left by his age and the haste necessitated by his profession, his work attains the high-water mark for human genius.

It takes him nine chapters to get to Chaucer, and in this section, as in others, one would gladly have left out many names for the sake of more complete mention of some. Specialists in any period will find his treatment, necessarily limited, as it is, scrappy and even undiscriminating. To give twice the space to Vanbrugh as to Congrève, and to narrate at length the story of "The Relapse," while he bestows one paragraph on Farquhar, who held the stage longer than either, seems preposterous; but to give James Payn as many lines as Trollope is laughable. Not always as possible is it, indeed, to know what Andrew would be at in this book as to be patient with his many perversities. Among these latter, his touch-and-go jocose treatment of Meredith is conspicuous. The book should rather be called "My Literary Tastes, Arranged in Chronological Order."

It is written in the never-too-lucid and always over-allusive style of the author. One need to have read like Lang himself to follow understandingly, and the way he incorporates his quotations in the body of his sentences adds to the uncertainty that you have caught his precise meaning. His whimsies appear frequently, as when he largely confines his discussion of the minor Elizabethan dramatists to conflicting quotations from critics and dissects the rhapsodies of Swinburne. Of the confirmed volatility of his own keenly critical spirit, there is much, but it only increases the general sense of confusion when it leads him to devote disproportionate space to making fun of unimportant matters or men because they were important in their day. Of his whimsical humor, there are plentiful flashes, although they warm more than they illuminate. Perhaps the best thing he says in this line is that Poe combines the maximum of music with the minimum of human nature, and trembles on the verge between pure nonsense and some realm beyond the verge of known romanticisms.

When the author draws near to our own times, his estimates (when clear) are more satisfactory; perhaps because his point of view is more evident, or the bias of his temperament more appreciable by the light of one's own. Yet when all is said, there are many human and fresh reflections in this book which one may find only in Lang. And there, alas, not again. Algernon Tassin

Disaster comes upon the unlucky possessors of the money, but Topham never suffers the exposure he deserves, because he dies before his crime is discovered. Mary Ann, a servant in the Topham household, is the means of bringing content and peace into the lives of the family. Book is made up of incidents in careers of the various Tophams, seen largely through Mary Ann's eyes.

THE LOST MILLION. By Winthrop Alden. 378p.12mo. Dodd, M. $1.25n.

Book is said to be by a well-known author, who has written it under a nom de plume to prove that a story can be popular even if author's real name is unknown to the public. Young Kemball, returning from a trip in South America, befriends an elderly man who is taken ill on board ship. On arriving in New York the man dies, first making the young man burn up a fortune in banknotes, and giving him a letter to deliver under strange circumstances, and a mysterious Egyptian bronze sealed cylinder. From these ingredients a tale of adventure and thrills is evolved.

PILGRIMS OF THE PLAINS; a romance of the Santa Fé trail. By Kate Adele Aplington. 412p.12mo. Browne. $1.25n.

Tells of the trail across the prairies in Kit Carson's day. Delia Randall with her brother, who is not strong, go with a trading caravan. They have adventures in plenty, all of which are told in Delia's diary, which also records her love story.

ASHES AND SPARKS. By Percy White. 499p. 12mo. Put. $1.25n.

Story of ideas—ideas entertained and carried into action by a highly intelligent and attractive young woman, who throws her cap over the windmills, not in an impulse of passion, but on conviction and as an assertion of principle. Hunger-striker, woman of fashion, assumed wife of a distinguished man, and finally a martyr to English marriage laws are the phases of her life. Story is told by the dry, devoted, conservative anti-suffragette cousin of the heroine.

THE GHOST GIRL. By Henry Kitchell Webster. 322p.front.12mo. Apltn. $1.25n.

Artist just home from Paris has been haunted by a girl supposed to have died there not long before. Asked by her rich aunt to paint the girl's portrait from a photograph he later finds that a girl exactly like the picture has been found murdered in the Hudson River. Tantalizing mysteries follow, woven about the girl's recent appearance to her aunt in spiritualistic seances.

BUNCH GRASS; a chronicle of life on a cattle ranch. By Horace Annesley Vachell. 314p.12mo. Doran. $1.20n.

Short stories which have appeared in various English and American magazines. The tales have a certain continuity because they reproduce the atmosphere of the California cow-country, where the author went thirty years ago and remained seventeen years, seeing it change from a cattle and sheep country to one subdivided into many small holdings, and pioneer life and lawlessness, pass away.

THE STREET OF THE FLUTE-PLAYER; a romance. By Henry de Vere Stacpoole. 309p.12mo. Duff. $1.25n.

Love story of ancient Athens. Diomed, a young exquisite who doubts the gods, patronizes art, and flings money about recklessly, sees and loves Nitetis, daughter of Gyges, the Metic banker. His enemies discover this and lay a plot by which he is lured to the girl's house and then arrested as a thief. Meantime Nitetis is married to her father's clerk. Then Pheidon, a street Arab, steps in and plays an important part in defeating the plot.

JEZEBEL. By Richard Pryce. 378p.12mo. H. Miff. $1.35n.

Give a child the name Jezebel, set her down in the midst of quiet, tradition-loving English county society, and trouble and difficulty are almost bound to ensue. Particularly as scandal attaches to the child's mother and the father is not liked. In spite of her name Jezebel is just a spirited, lovable English girl, who would not be anything but straight and true. By author of "Christopher."

THE BURDEN OF A WOMAN. By Richard Pryce. 301p.12mo. H. Miff. $1.35n.

To the little Welsh farming village of Maen Gorsedd came Mary Redwing some eight or ten years before the story opens. She lives with her little daughter, quietly, industriously, happily. Then Peter Davidson comes into her life. Peter is a well-to-do farmer, who loves her and wants to marry her. When she tells him she was never married to her child's father he leaves her, and turns to Hannah Rees, a woman of good family, who has always lived in the village. A year of married life with Hannah teaches Peter that there are fine shadings in morality of which he never dreamed.

of Arabian extraction, and a gentleman hermit, that she forgets to be sick. Love affairs for both girls follow, and come to a happy conclusion.

Novel by author of "The heavenly twins," dealing with modern problems. Scene is rural England, and the characters embrace a whole community from duke and duchess down to the humblest agricultural laborer. Adnam Pratt, son of a tenant on the estate, develops an ability for intensive farming and makes a small orchard so richly productive that surprise, jealousy, romance, and intrigue get their grip on the entire community. Story is ably worked out, and is a strong appeal for the "back-to-the-soil" movement.

THE LEE SHORE. By R. Macaulay. 314p.12mo. Doran. $1.25n.

Novel won first prize in the $5000 Prize Novel Award made by Hodder & Stoughton. Story of a man determined to be happy. An aristocrat by birth and training, a vagabond by nature, Peter Margerison preferred the chance-met adventurers of the highroad to more normal and well-regulated persons. He rebelled against conventions, and fled from cities to the freedom of the road, his "lee shore." Tale is full of lovable men and women, an atmosphere of holiday care-freeness, and sun-bathed landscapes of Italy's coast towns.

LANCHESTER OF BRAZENOZE. By Ronald Mcdonald. 397p.12mo. Lane. $1.30, fixed.

Raymond Lanchester is a modern knight of chivalry, who, in loyalty to an unfaithful wife and for love of his little son, takes upon his own shoulders the burden of another's crime. The clever amateur detective work of his young actress friend, "Divvy-Di," brings to light a writer of anonymous letters who is spreading misery far and wide. The story ends with the reconciliation of friends long parted and the well-earned happiness of Lanchester and "Divvy-Di."

THE DECLENSION OF HENRY D'ALBIAC. By V. Goldie. 312p.8vo. Stokes. $1.25n.

A correct young Frenchman rescues a young suffragette in a London riot, and is shocked and fascinated by her. She converts him to vegetarianism and anti-shooting, paints his picture, unintentionally causes him to break with his rather languid English fiancée, and finally refuses to marry him because, having lost her first husband and child, she feels she cannot love again.

THE PORT OF DREAMS. By Miriam Alexander. 416p.12mo. Put. $1.35n.

By the author of the prize story "Beyond the law." Tale is concerned with the Jacobite cause and its Irish supporters. John Clavering had served the Stewarts for thirty years with courage and ability, only to fail on three critical occasions, overcome by cowardice. There had been cowards before in his family, but he had always held fear at bay, and his overwhelming shame, the influence of his failures on the cause and his friends amid stirring adventures make an interesting story.

JOYFUL HEATHERBY. By Payne Erskine. Illus. by M. Leone Bracker. 456p.12mo. Little, B. $1.35n.

Scenes are chiefly laid in Boston and a small New England coast town. The leading characters are an artist and a delightful country girl. When Joyful Heatherby's grandparents die she is left alone and penniless and goes to Boston, where she is employed as a governess. Mark Thorn has known her in her country home, but believing that he really loves another woman, leaves Joyful without realizing that she fills his heart. Realization comes and then she is lost to him, months going by before he finds a trace of her. Joyful has bitter experiences in her fight to earn a living, but all ends happily.

THE LITTLE GRAY SHOE; a romance. By Percy Brebner. Illus. by F. Vaux Wilson. 349p.12mo. Little, B. $1.25n.

The hero—big, good-natured and courageous, an exile from his native land, is a trooper in the King's Guard at Dravstadt, in Saxe-Oldenburg, when the romance that he is unconsciously awaiting comes to him in assisting a charming maiden in distress. Saxe-Oldenburg is a romantic country, ripe for revolution, and there follow plots and counter-plots, the scurry of hoofs, the clash of swords.

THE SILVER DRESS. By Mrs. G. Norman. 348p. 12mo. Duff. $1.25n.

Eve Martindale had reached the age of thirty-five without having met any men, living her quiet life in Chelsea with an old aunt, going to and giving luncheons and teas, to which came women as detached from the world as herself. Then suddenly she enters society, meets a man younger than herself, who proves to her that at thirty-five a woman is not necessarily old and undesirable. Eve's learning of this lesson makes the story.

COME RACK! COME ROPE! By Robt. Hugh Benson. 475p.12mo. Dodd, M. $1.35n.

Taking the reign of Elizabeth as his time, and the persecution of the Catholics as his theme, Father Benson has written a story of the love and devotion and courage of Robin Audrey, a young country squire; of the maiden who dedicated him to the priesthood; of his playmate, Thomas Babington, known in history for his efforts in behalf of Mary Queen of Scots, and others. There are adventures in plenty.

THE HERO OF HERAT; a frontier romance. By Maud Diver. 457p.port.fold.map.12mo. Put. $1.50n.

"Captain Desmond, V.C.," and other Anglo-Indian tales have shown the author's familiarity with life in India. In this book the central figure is Eldred Pottinger, an historic personage whose life, full of adventure, had all the charm of romance. Setting of the story is Afghanistan and the first Afghan war, with its many blunders and disasters.

PROBLEMS OF THE SEXES. By Jean Finot. Tr. under the authority of the author by Mary J. Safford. 428p.8vo. Put. $2n.

A presentation of the attitude of the ages toward woman and a plea for her further enfranchisement from imposed and unnatural limitations. The plea for a deeper participation in life of a sex that has too long been regarded as predestined to domesticity, is made as much in the interest of the race as in that of woman herself. Only through the co-operation of women in the tasks that lie before the world and the problems that await solution can a definite and representative advance be achieved. of the British Empire. Author says, "The day must come when the great British communities must realize the inferiority and disadvantage of their colonial status, and will demand to become partners with their motherland in a British Federation. Thus we shall have a British Empire that will share with that other great Anglo-Saxon community, the United States, the magnificent task of guiding the destiny and peace of the world." Index.

UNSEEN EMPIRE; a study of the plight of nations that do not pay their debts. By Dav. Starr Jordan. 211p.12mo. Am. Unit. Assn. $1.25n.

"In this book I have tried to tell in part the story of the bondage of the nations due to the cost of war and of war preparation. I have tried to show that civilized nations are one and all in their degree under the dominion of a power stronger than kings or parliaments, more lasting than armies or navies, that is, the unseen empire of finance. I have tried to show that this mastery is not now in the hands of individual men, however powerful, but that it has passed over into an imperial empire of debt."—Introduction.

THE NAM FAMILY; a study in cacogenics. By Arthur H. Estabrook and Chas. Benedict Davenport. 88p.4charts.4figs.f°. Eug. Record Off. $1.

Nam family is descended from a roving Dutchman who in 1760 wandered to the mountains of western Massachusetts from the Hudson Valley, and married an Indian princess. In old histories they are spoken of as "vagabonds, half farmers, half fishermen and hunters, and who, on their occasional visit to the settlements, were apt to fall into temptation and rum." The study here presented shows how these characteristics, alcoholism and lack of ambition may be traced through the descendants right down to the present.

THE HILL FOLK. By Florence H. Danielson and Chas. Benedict Davenport. 56p.3 charts.4figs.f°. Eug. Record Off. 75c.

"Report on a rural community of hereditary defectives." Result of an investigation of two family trees in a small Massachusetts town. Aims to show how much crime, misery and expense may result from the union of two defective individuals—how a large number of the present court frequenters, paupers and town nuisances are connected by a significant network of relationship. Includes discussion of the undesirable traits in the light of the Mendelian analysis.

GENETICS; an introduction to the study of heredity. By Herb. Eugene Walter. 386p. 72figs.diagrs.12mo. Macm. $1.50n.

THE MOTHER BOOK. By Mrs. M. E. M. Sangster. 392p.8vo. McClg. $2n.

Motherhood in its widest implications is considered in these pages. Chapters of the book—which originally appeared in The Ladies' Home Companion—are really addressed not only to the mother, but also to the girl thus far only contemplating matrimony. From that point in her life until with gray hair she presides over a home with children and grandchildren, the late Mrs. Sangster's advice and comment is directed to every important phase of her progress. A number of the author's original poems add to the interest of the book, which is made up in gift form.

THE HELPING HAND COOK BOOK; with a menu for every day in the year; together with numerous recipes. By Marion Harland & Mrs. C. T. Herrick. 356p.8vo. Moff. Y. $1.25n

Manual prepared carefully by two experienced housekeepers is meant to be more than a list of menus for family use. It is written especially for housekeepers of moderate means whose earnest desire to set palatable and nourishing food before those to whom they minister, is often thwarted by the necessity of keeping table expenses within a certain limit. Authors believe that next to cooking, the most important element in setting a good table is an agreeable variety of food, and they have aimed to supply this with each returning season.

SUNDAY SUPPERS; being fifty-four chafing-dish recipes, old and new. By Alice Laidlaw Williams. 108p.16mo. Duff. $1n.

OLD HOUSES AND VILLAGE BUILDINGS IN EAST ANGLIA, NORFOLK, SUFFOLK AND ESSEX. By Basil Oliver. Illus. by collotype pls. fr. photos, especially taken by Horace Dan and others; with numerous illus. in the text. 121p.8vo. Helburn. $8.40n.

Norfolk, Suffolk and rural Essex are here taken to constitute East Anglia. Gives representative examples of all types of small buildings—other than ecclesiastical—which were erected between the latter part of the fifteenth century and early years of the eighteenth. Plans are not generally given, as these are as a rule inconvenient according to modern ideas, but much may be learned from the external treatment, and that is what is specially developed here. Absence of stone in these counties caused use of timber, brick, plaster and flint, singly or in different combinations, which may be studied most profitably by modern architects. (Old Cottage Ser.)

HUMAN QUINTESSENCE. By Sigurd Ibsen. Authorized tr. by Marcia Hargis Janson. 303p.12mo. Huebsch. $1.50n.

Author is son of Henrik Ibsen. Book is divided into four related essays. The first, "Nature and man," discloses the means by which mankind's capacity for self improvement is to be rationally developed. The factor which determines the best fitted to survive is "human quintessence." Second section, "Why politics lags behind,' is an attempt to solve the question why, when industrial, æsthetic and scientific activities are ruled by a spirit of progress the field of political and sociologic efficiency is largely abandoned to hazard. "Of human aptitudes and human art" is a recapitulation of the possibilities lying latent in us all. "Of great men: an essay in valuation," author makes clear that the really great man is a combination of forces.

THE SOUTH POLE. 2 v. By Roald Engelbregt Gravning Amundsen. Fronts.pls. ports.maps.facsims.diagrs. L. Keedick. $10.

"An account of the Norwegian Antarctic expedition in the 'Fram,' 1910-1912; tr. from the Norwegian by A. G. Chater." Begins with a brief summary of Antarctic exploration, followed by an account of the preparations. Then the reader embarks with the expedition and follows its experiences day by day from Norway to Madeira, thence to the Antarctic, where Amundsen makes his dash south, Lieut. Prestrud explores the barrier to King Edward VII. Land and Lieut. Nilsen takes the "Fram" away to examine the ocean depths. The "Fram" met both the "Terra Nova" of Captain Scott's expedition and the Japanese Antarctic party, and while they addressed each other politely they had very little to do with one another. The book is illustrated with many interesting photographs and with serviceable maps. In the appendix the scientific results obtained are summarized. Index.

MEMOIRS RELATING TO FOUCHÉ, Minister of Police under Napoleon I. Tr. fr. the French by E. Jules Méras. 338p.illus.12 mo. St. & W. $1.50n.

Memoirs first issued in September, 1824, under the title of "Mémoires de Joseph Fouché, duc d'Otrante, ministre de la police générale." They had in fact been written by Alphonse de Beauchamp from autographic notes and authentic documents. This was proven by the numerous details they contained, which no one but Fouché could have known. An account of the eventful days of the Directoire, Consulate and Empire. (Court Ser. of French Memoirs.)

THE LIFE AND LETTERS OF WILLIAM COBBETT OF ENGLAND AND AMERICA. By Lewis Melville. In 2 v. 445p.32illus.8vo. Lane. $10n.

"Based upon hitherto unpublished family papers." William Cobbett, son of a peasant in Surrey, raised himself to a far-reaching position, and learning English grammar, at the age of twenty-three was, before he reached middle age, pronounced one of the most effective writers of showy and racy English. He spent some years in America, where he wrote his "Porcupine papers," and was a staunch federalist. He was elected member of Parliament and took a prominent part in politics.

THE ROMANCE OF THE ROTHSCHILDS. By Ignatius Balla. 295p.pls.ports.8vo. Put. $3n.

Contains story of the accumulation of the greatest aggregate fortune and the history of the most noteworthy family of financiers that the world has seen. To the financing of this family the accomplishment of some of the great movements of history are due. There are many anecdotes, stories and picturesque details, which show how concerted action and zeal, combined with capacity, have built up a world power of finance.

THE LETTERS OF A POST-IMPRESSIONIST; being the familiar correspondence of Vincent Van Gogh. 212p.port.8vo. H. Miff. $2n.

Anthony M. Ludovici has written an introductory essay on Van Gogh and his art to this collection of the artist's letters translated from the German fourth edition, 1911, of Cassirer's "Vincent Van Gogh, Briefe." Van Googh was born in Holland in 1853 and took up painting in 1881. For a while he was influenced by the impressionists, then developed a style of his own, which is more closely allied to the modern French school than to his own country. These letters to his brother and an intimate friend contain his art-credo and state his attitude of mind. He died in 1890.

THE PRIVATE LIFE OF HENRY MAITLAND; a record dictated to J. H. Ed. by Morley Roberts. 319p.12mo. Doran. $1.25n.

Under a thin veil of disguise book details the unhappy life of George Gissing, the novelist. The story contains amazing disclosures of perseverance, penury, and literary conditions existing in England which seem incredible in this day. This man of acknowledged genius during the greater part of his career, led a dual existence, one of public fame and private poverty.

EMPIRES OF THE FAR EAST. By Lancelot Lawton. In 2 v. 1598p.map.8vo. Small, M. $7.50n.

"A study of Japan and her colonial possessions, of China and Manchuria and of the political questions of eastern Asia and the Pacific." Author considers the result of the Anglo-Japanese Alliance from the standpoint of America, Canada and Australia, and also the possibilities of China.

RECENT EVENTS AND PRESENT POLICIES IN CHINA. By John Otway Percy Bland. 502p.pls.fold.maps.8vo. Lipp. $4n.

By joint author with E. Backhouse of "China under the Empress Dowager." Portion of present volume was made up of articles contributed to British periodicals. He draws comparisons between China and Young Turkey, showing that the former is quite as unfit for constitutional government as the latter was. The fundamental problem is an economic one, over-population as a creed, and accompanying struggle for bread on a level of chronic starvation.

CHRISTIAN ANTIQUITIES IN THE NILE VALLEY. By Somers Clarke. 234p.maps.plans.4to. Oxf. U. $11.75n.

"A contribution towards the study of the ancient churches." The buildings which grew up under Christian influence in Egypt have, as yet, been little studied, but these ruins extend not only from the sea to Aswan, but south, far away into the Sudan. When the Egyptians were converted to Christianity, how and by whom is not certainly known, they did not erect churches in the traditional way in which their forefathers erected the temples, but made a clean cut with the past, and Byzantine influence dominated everything native. It is these ruins which are here studied. Index.

THE TREASURY OF ANCIENT EGYPT. By Arth. E. B. Pierce Weigall. 321p.8vo. Rand, McN. $2.25n.

"Miscellaneous chapters on ancient Egyptian history and archæology." Contains a dozen chapters, some of them studies of special phases of the life of the ancient Egyptians, and others in the nature of essays on archæology in general and Egyptian archæology in particular. By inspector-general of Upper Egypt, Department of Antiquities.

THE MALAY PENINSULA. By Arnold Wright & Thos. H. Reid. 360p.51illus.map.8vo. Scrib. $3n.

"A record of British progress in the middle east." Comprehensive account of the development of British influence in the middle east, from the earliest times to the present day, and the remarkable growth, commercial and otherwise, of the Peninsula. Index.

A NEW BOOK BY

H. G WELLS

The Discovery of the Future

"Where there is no vision, the people perish"

A BOOK of prophetic vision in which the author, preëminent among English writers of today, shows that by utilizing the intellectual forces which have enabled us to write the history of the past, we may with reasonable certainty forecast the future. Wit, humor and the distillation of a lifetime's pondering, combine to make this essay a noteworthy contribution to the season's literature. It will stimulate thought and provoke discussion. No admirer of Wells can afford not to read it.

A DELICIOUS COMEDY NOVEL

SEVEN KEYS TO BALDPATE

By EARL DERR BIGGERS

Baldpate Inn has SEVEN keys. The novelist has one. The other six fall into the hands of six apparent lunatics—(1) a hermit who flees from barbers and women has a (2) a peroxide blonde who "just loves" men has a (3) a college professor who has been laughed out of his job has a (4) a political "boss" who eats cigars alive and he has a (5) a Belle of High Societee has a (6) a bold, bad clubman who has a and—The Girl. She (bless her) hasn't a key, you notice, but she provides one—to the mystery that Baldpate Inn immediately becomes soaked in.

CRAIG KENNEDY, SCIENTIFIC DETECTIVE

Without Being Found Out

CRAIG KENNEDY is the hero of this detective novel, as he was of its popular predecessor "The Silent Bullet"

"Very ingenious and new," says Thomas A. Edison of Craig Kennedy's exploits.

Now think of Edison, the Wizard, the most ingenious man and the greatest inventor of new things of his time, calling a book "ingenious and new."

Mustn't that book have ingenuity and novelty to the nth degree?

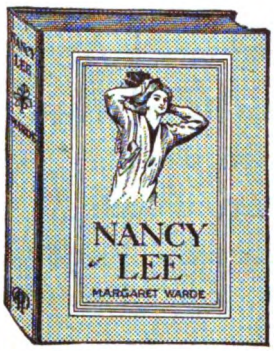
To Whom It Probably Will Not Concern

Legion, usseems, are they that seek to wear
The mantle of O. Henry. May we dare
Suggest to them that fill the fiction woods
Ye have the pattern, but have not the goods?

FRANKLIN P. ADAMS

No——we have the goods in 12 original packages, quite different from the Mantle-Wearing Brand. Why go on a diet of pre-digested humor from which the laugh has been extracted?



Twelve volumes are now ready, the first Complete O. Henry, bound in cloth and in leather. One book in stock will sell all its brothers, because the man who reads it will invariably come back for the rest.

THE VERDICT ON OUR FIRST TWO BOOKS

"THE LAPSE OF ENOCH WENTWORTH"
"PILGRIMS OF THE PLAINS"

We feel that we have been very fortunate in our first ventures, and for the benefit of our friends in the trade who have co-operated so handsomely in making these books sure successes we quote here some opinions as to thier quality and interest. Two editions of each were required before publication, and third edition now printing.

"THE LAPSE OF ENOCH WENTWORTH"

East

BOSTON TIMES

A story of more than ordinary interest. Has decided originality.

SPRINGFIELD (MASS.) HOMESTEAD

Built on a really unique situation. A powerful and convincing tale.

WASHINGTON STAR

An uncommonly fine story. Indisputably a sustained, well rounded story of picturesque and dramatic substance.

N. Y. BOOKSELLER, NEWSDEALER AND STATIONER

An absorbing novel of New York theatrical life. Has something new in plot, which in itself is sufficient to recommend a story.

BOSTON GLOBE

Originality of plot is easily one of the most distinguishing characteristics of "The Lapse of Enoch Wentworth." The novel is possessed of great power and certain of success.

West

CHICAGO RECORD-HERALD

A gripping story and a jolly good tale. Reads like a play. Full of action, and abounds in dramatic situations and human interest.

CHICAGO TRIBUNE

There is an air of naturalness and simplicity about the book.

CHICAGO DAILY NEWS

Out of the ordinary line of novels. Has a psychological interest, and a pleasing love affair.

CHICAGO EXAMINER

Mrs. Curtis has made a conquest in creating a novel with a real human purpose that every reader can understand and appreciate.

SALT LAKE TRIBUNE

A vital, lively story, bright, fascinating, told with skill and dash.

South

NASHVILLE TENNESSEAN

If this new publishing house can keep up to the standard set by the first book it turns out, its success is assured. "The Lapse of Enoch Wentworth" is original in plot and skillful to a rare degree in the manner of that plot's development.

RICHMOND NEWS LEADER

Dorcas is a fine character, and brings with her a rare sweetness and charm.

"PILGRIMS OF THE PLAINS"

BOSTON GLOBE

There is something different about Mrs. Aplington's "Pilgrims of the Plains," something quite distinct from any other story within memory. It is a romance, but it is not the romance which is the moving element; the motive which commands immediate attention and buoys up these interesting pages to lofty heights, is sisterly devotion—the sacrificial love of the heroine, Deya, who gives up her pleasant, sunny, home life that she may accompany her invalid brother, John, on his trip through the Western plains. The story of this long and tedious trip down the Santa Fe trail is full of thrills and adventure. Such obstacles as the rushes of buffalo herds, attacks by bandits, encounters with Mexican Indians, all related in simple, but telling fashion, furnish plenty of wholesome excitement, while on the other hand, carefully traced detail, analysis of feeling and general description provide a potent balancing force. There is a refreshing realism about the book. One could never for a moment question the truth of it, even if the reader were not told in the preface that the story and many of its incidents singly are founded on fact. Such character outlines as those of Uncle Hiram, the driver, and Joe-Lu, the colored boy, are possible only after the closest and most intimate personal touch.

West

CHICAGO EXAMINER

The novelist finds thrilling material in the past of the great West, and Mrs. Aplington presents a glowing success of this particular kind of task in her recent book entitled "Pilgrims of the Plains." F. G. Browne & Co. make no mistake in sending this wholesome literary product to market. Interesting stories of the Santa Fe trail have been written, but Mrs. Aplington's has not been surpassed and will not be excelled. The author weaves a most attractive love story into the perilous journey.

WALT MASON writes:

"It is a strong unusual story, well written and well balanced; and it will grow in favor, for those who read it will praise it."

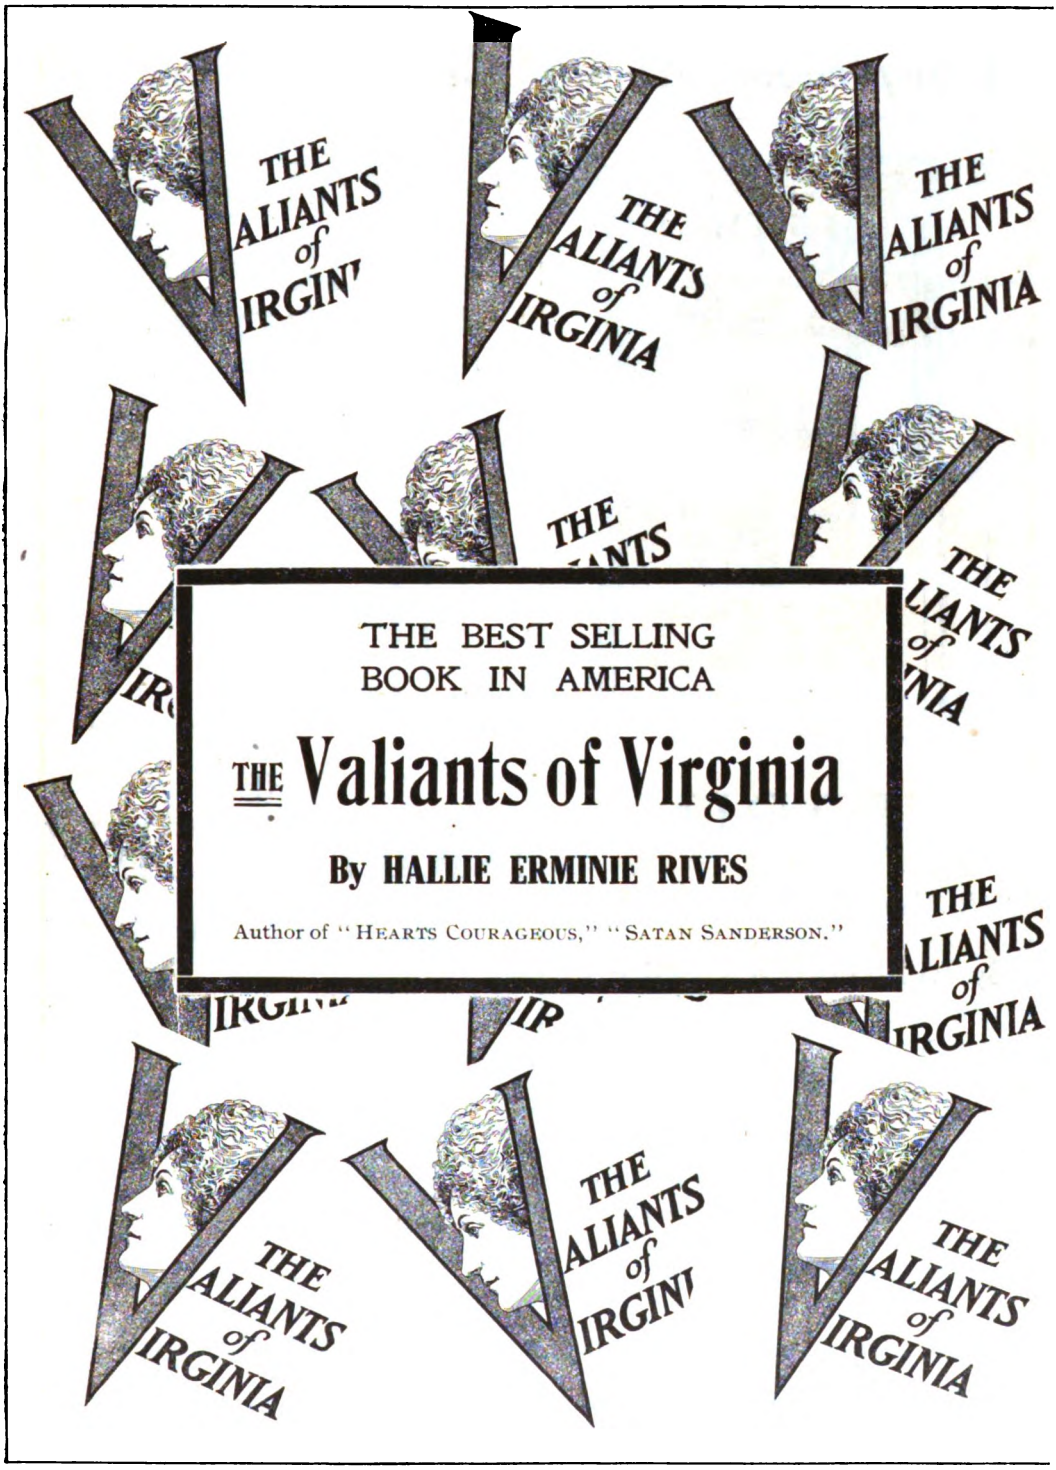
MARY ROBERTS RINEHART

By the Author of
When a Man Marries,
Where There's a Will, etc.



Mystery, desperate and baffling, is frankly the thing in this new Rinehart novel. The sudden, unaccountable disappearance of a well-known actress; a thrilling case of mistaken identity; a network of incriminating circumstances pointing to the guilt of the actress' husband; a chain of evidence establishing a substantial alibi; clews galore indicating a score of possibilities; a jury trial; a strange love plot;—all these go to make this tale more intense than any previous work by this popular author. Yet it still retains the characteristic Rinehart element of humor and cheer.

Mrs. Rinehart has never been seen to better advantage than in this thrilling novel, "The Case of Jennie Brice."

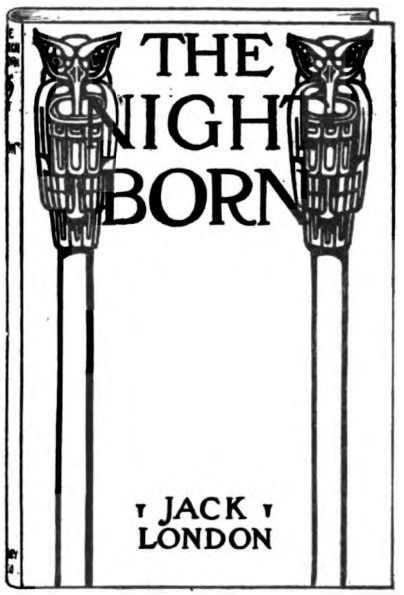
PIPPIN



A Tale of London Streets

By EVELYN VAN BUREN

The story of how Pippin of the London streets and a young American actress starved together in an attic, as cheerfully as might be, and how the Earl, who owned a theater, played the god in the machine. As fresh and piquant a love story as has appeared in a long, long time.

Reginald Birch made the pictures

THE NIGHT-BORN

By JACK LONDON

The new book by the author of "The Call of the Wild," "Smoke Bellew," etc. Exceptionally good short stories with a touch of daredevil impossibility making them the more readable. Fragments of the author's own experiences are evidently woven into some of the stories; and they all have Jack London's vivid and vital telling.

PUTNAM'S NEW NOVELS

By the Author of the Great Prize Novel

The Port of Dreams

By MIRIAM ALEXANDER

Author of "Beyond the Law"

"Miss Alexander tells her story with much skill and beauty. . . . She has created an ineffaceable, absolutely unartificial 'atmosphere'—the atmosphere of Ireland's weird, sombre romance and of France's dark, hopeless intrigues of a hundred and fifty years ago . . . Sincere, conscientious and interesting."—Boston Evening Transcript. $1.35 net

Who Laughs Last

By ASHTON HILLIERS

Author of "As It Happened," "The Master Girl," etc.

"A vigorous and vivacious romance, rich in human content, abounding in telling contrasts of character and impressive portraiture, and seasoned with incident and adventure." — Cleveland Plain Dealer. $1.35 net

Ashes and Sparks

By PERCY WHITE

"Cleverness itself. The way in which the author manages straightaway to satirize impartially and with a splendid moderation two extremes in modern social life—the hidebound worshipers of the adventurers and crazily fanatical 'reformers'—is a thing of joy and an artistic master-feat."—Chicago Inter-Ocean. $1.35 net

The Adventures of Miss Gregory

By PERCEVAL GIBBON

A book full of freshness and surprise. Miss Gregory knocks about the world, and wherever she goes she is in the thick of things. Her extraordinary experiences are full of graphic pictures of men and women in widely separated parts of the globe, and the characterization of these is as forceful and impressive as the narrative in which they play their parts is swift in movement and enthralling in theme. With 8 Illustrations. $1.35 net

Patchwork Comedy

Author of the "Joyous Wayfarer"

There is a plenty of swift action, sharp character drawing, and life-like depiction of scenes, and the author does not miss the opportunity of now and then injecting some very penetrating observations on life and of pointing out contrasting features in English and French character. $1.30 net

The Burning Question

By GRACE DENIO LITCHFIELD

Author of "In the Crucible," "The Moving Finger Writes," etc.

"The story of a man who unknowingly becomes a bigamist, believing his first wife—a cold and unloving person—dead. Miss Litchfield presents an arresting series of circumstances in a telling and convincing way, and at the same time points out an important moral truth . . . An intense and dramatic story."—Baltimore Evening News. $1.35 net

A Word to Booksellers

WE ARE TAKING IT FOR GRANTED that you will use some form of imprint bulletin this year. The Bookseller who attempts to get along without this means of communication with his customers,—this cheapest and most effective of all forms of bookstore advertising—is overlooking a great opportunity. Taking this fact for granted, therefore, the question then arises:—which of the several imprint bulletins now available do you intend to use?

TO DECIDE THIS QUESTION ON ITS MERITS, put yourself in the place of one of your customers—the typical busy intelligent man or woman of today who buys and reads a few new books each year. Consider the matter of a book bulletin from their standpoint rather than from that of your own personal ideas and preferences. What are their needs and desires in this respect?

THERE IS ONLY ONE BOOK BULLETIN that fulfills completely the requirements of the average book-buyer. That bulletin is BOOKS OF THE MONTH. It was the first in the field; its circulation exceeds that of all others combined; it is the best; and it is as cheap as any.

TAKE THE LATEST ISSUE OF BOOKS OF THE MONTH and compare it with any other imprint book bulletin—compare its general arrangement, the classification, the form of the entries; compare its up-to-the-minute quality—count the books entered here that are not included in the corresponding issue of any of the other bulletins—and count the books in the others that were published from one to three months ago. Then consider that BOOKS OF THE MONTH can be mailed with your own regular envelopes, with your monthly bills, statements, etc., without extra labor or expense; whereas others have to be mailed separately, involving the work and expense of addressing, folding, etc., besides the additional charge for envelopes and postage.

THIS COMPARISON IS ALL WE ASK. Isn't it worth your while to give it? There is nothing of more importance to you in your business.

GUINEA GOLD

By BEATRICE GRIMSHAW, author of "When the Red Gods Call." 12mo. Cloth, $1.25 net. Postage 12 cents.

Another of Miss Grimshaw's powerful stories of love and adventure in New Guinea. Miss Grimshaw writes with a vivid pen, and well she may, for it is all first hand knowledge with her. Her characters are alive, her descriptions are vivid and the story is one which appeals to all who care for love and adventure.

MY LADY PEGGY LEAVES TOWN

By FRANCES AYMAR MATHEWS. Illustrated. 12mo. Cloth, $1.30 net. Postage 12 cents.

Miss Mathews has at last given us the long and eagerly awaited successor to her well-known "Lady Peggy Goes to Town." But this Lady Peggy is a very modern young woman, a high bred English girl of today who is a lineal descendant of the original Lady Peggy. She leaves New York to lead the simple life in the West, and her adventures there are varied and thrilling.

BACHELOR'S BUTTONS:

THE CANDID CONFESSIONS OF A SHY BACHELOR

By EDWARD BURKE. 12mo. Cloth, $1.30 net. Postage 12 cents.

A most delightful tale, full of the quaintest humor and most delicate sentiment. Imagine a shy bachelor, who has been teaching school for many years and who is approaching middle age, suddenly enriched beyond his wildest dreams. What will he do with his fortune? We must admit that he puts it to good use. "A new humorist . . . most amusing reading . . . The Author has a light touch and a very pretty humor."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"When I came to the last page I wanted more."—Daily Citizen.

BARBARA

By ALICE and CLAUDE ASKEW. 12mo. Cloth, $1.30 net. Postage 12 cents.

A charming story of life in Ireland. The character of Barbara is drawn with beautiful skill, her impulsiveness, her rebellious modes, her womanly beauty and charm, differentiate her from the ordinary heroine, and in Father Matthewes we have the most delightful Priest in modern fiction. The setting is Irish and the book abounds in the pathos and humor and charm so characteristic of the beautiful Green Isle.

MEMOIRS OF MIMOSA

By ANNE ELLIOT. 12mo. Cloth, $1.30 net. Postage 12 cents.

Mimosa tells us all her thoughts and doings, good and bad, with equal frankness. In spite of her follies one cannot help loving her. She is so feminine, so dainty and so alluring. Written in most delightful style.

WILD GRAPES

By MARIE LOUISE VAN SAANEN. 12mo. Cloth, $1.30 net. Postage 12 cents.

This is Davy's story and it is an intensely interesting one. One is struck with the humanness of it all, and our admiration and sympathy for Davy grow as we read. The scene shifts from England to Australia and thence to America. Davy is a "man" and wins his way to success in spite of much hard luck. His love for his wife is touching and real.

FEBRUARY PUBLICATIONS

JAMES FENIMORE COOPER. By MARY E. PHILLIPS. Illustrated. $2.50 net. Postage, 20 cents.

As a monumental record of the MAN, Fenimore Cooper, this work will be found invaluable, for it contains much personal material heretofore unpublished.

FROM STUDIO TO STAGE. By WEEDON GROSSMITH. With photogravure frontispiece and 32 other illustrations. $4.00 net. Postage, 25 cents.

This volume comprises the recollections of the well-known English actor, Weedon Grossmith, from his earliest boyhood days. His career, naturally, has brought him into touch with all the famous men and women of his time, and his book is filled with anecdotes of the doings of his friends as well as his own experiences on and off the stage. His reminiscences concerning Sir Henry Irving are especially interesting.

THE PLAY OF TODAY: Studies in Play-Structure for the Student and the Theatre-goer. By ELIZABETH R. HUNT. Cloth, $1.50 net. Postage, 12 cents.

The book is a study of the play from the standpoint of the student, the playgoer, and the general public. It is a terse, simple setting forth of the principles of play-structure.

THE VAN EYCKS AND THEIR ART. By W. H. JAMES WEALE and MAURICE BROCKWELL. With numerous illustrations. 8vo. $4.00 net. Postage, 20 cents.

A most valuable publication—the result of a long series of patient investigations by Mr. Weale, the greatest living authority on the art of the Netherlands.

THE LETTER BAG OF LADY ELIZABETH SPENCER STANHOPE. By A. M. W. STIRLING, author of "Coke of Norfolk," "Annals of a Yorkshire House." With a color plate, two photogravures, and numerous other illustrations. 2 Volumes. 8vo. $10.00 net. Postage, 50 cents.

These papers give a picture of social and political life during nearly seventy years of a most enthralling period. The writers possessed exceptional opportunities for mingling with the best-known people of their day; beneath their nimble pens Collingwood, Wellington, even Napoleon himself, are presented to us in a new and intimate guise.

AUSTRIA: HER PEOPLE AND THEIR HOMELANDS. By JAMES BAKER. With 48 illustrations in color by Donald Maxwell. 8vo. Cloth, $6.50 net. Postage, 25 cents.

This volume, in a light and interesting fashion, opens up new scenes and new studies for tourist and traveler, artist, ethnologist and historian, in such romantic spots as the Tatra Mountains, the Bukovina, or the lovely new route of the Tauern Railway, and on the sea coast of Austria, so richly full of beauty and historic interest.

ST. QUIN. By DION CLAYTON CALTHROP, author of "Perpetua Mary," etc. Cloth, $1.30 net. Postage, 12 cents.

A London love story, in which the past mingles deliciously with the present, and Pamela, an eighteenth century heroine, is the rival of her twentieth century sister, Felicity, in the love of Edmond St. Quin.

THE GOVERNOR. By KARIN MICHAELIS STANGELAND, author of "The Dangerous Age," "Elsie Lindtner," etc. 12mo. Cloth, $1.20 net. Postage, 10 cents.

A powerful tale of primitive days, describing life in Denmark. The passions, motives, and ambitions which actuated the men and women of the time are portrayed in an intense and vivid manner. The style of the book is very dramatic. Its episodes are startling, and the descriptions of character are striking.

THE UNBEARABLE BASSINGTON. By H. H. MUNRO. Cloth, $1.25 net. Postage, 12 cents.

Comus Bassington is described by his schoolmaster as "one of Nature's highly finished products." After leaving school he runs loose for a time in London, gets deeply in debt, and even when at the absolute end of his tether fascinates the reader with his store of spontaneous gaiety.

THE ASPIRATIONS OF JEAN SERVIEN. By ANATOLE FRANCE. Translation by Alfred Allinson. 8vo. $1.75 net. Postage, 15 cents. Uniform with previous volumes in the set of the WORKS OF ANATOLE FRANCE.

Jean Servien, son of a bookbinder, born in a backshop in the Rue Notre-Dame des Champs, began at an early age to live a most interesting life of adventure. As a character-sketch, this is one of Anatole France's masterpieces.

THE LOVE DREAM. By GEORGE VANE. 12mo. Cloth, $1.25 net. Postage, 12 cents.

In this book we meet with some Sicilians of old lineage settled in a manor-house in England. We have many glimpses of the diplomatic circles in London. The love interest of the story never flags to the last page, when the hero's many troubles come to an end.

TWO SPRING SUCCESSES

THE OLD GARDENS OF ITALY: HOW TO VISIT THEM. By MRS. AUBREY LE BLOND. With 100 illustrations from the author's own photographs. Cloth, $1.25 net. Postage, 10 cents.

HAMMOND'S COMPREHENSIVE ATLAS OF THE WORLD

HERE is an atlas that leaves nothing to be desired in respect either to scope, reliability or convenience of arrangement. It is everything a good atlas should be—containing down-to-date maps, latest census statistics and unique but valuable gazetteer features. For attractiveness and durability, it is unexcelled, and, from cover to cover the result is one which we are delighted to have achieved. We are proud to publish such a work and proud to sell it.

IT IS THE FIRST AMERICAN ATLAS OF LARGE CLEAR MAPS WHICH WILL FIT INTO BOOKSHELVES OF THE USUAL SIZE

The Comprehensive Atlas when closed measures 9 x 7 ins. and is 1½ ins. thick, yet the maps are of such size that practically every post-office and railroad station are legibly included. This combination has been effected by engraving double-page maps for every principal political division on the face of the globe, and several states and countries are given as many as four double-page maps, which indicates how thoroughly the civilized world has been mapped in this new atlas. There are in all 256 pages of down-to-date maps showing the very latest geographical changes, including all new railroads, new counties, new towns, etc.

REFERENCE FEATURES

Many pages of valuable geographical statistics which in themselves are bound to prove excellent "selling points" follow the maps, and then comes our "Descriptive Gazetteer of the Principal Cities of the World"—a compilation of great merit and immense utility, making the atlas the last word in reference books of this nature. This gazetteer contains brief but comprehensive and down-to-date accounts of the great trade centers, places of historic interest, resorts, etc.

CENSUS MATTER

Another valuable feature of this new work is a very complete list of the cities of the world, giving the latest population statistics, and the complete results of the last enumerations of the United States and Canada, with the new population figures of all states, territories, counties, cities, villages and hamlets. In addition to giving the population figures this index locates each place on the state maps, and contains over 100,000 references. This makes another vital "selling point" of unquestioned appeal.

THE BINDING

The book is bound in two styles—in full leather and in cloth. The former being the first one of its size to be issued in limp leather is bound to prove exceedingly popular. Flexibility in large atlases has been a long felt want, never adequately satisfied until now. This work contains a total of 500 pages.

That the production of this new work marks an epoch in atlas publishing is an unquestioned fact which can readily be conceived when the atlas is examined. Hence we predict for it an enormous sale.

PRICES

Flexible leather, round corners, red edges, gold stamp..... $5.00

PARCEL POST GUIDE OF THE UNITED STATES

No national legislation has resulted in such widespread controversy and vital interest as the Parcel Post Law Every dealer in the country has had repeated requests for publications giving information on this subject. But up to now nothing has been prepared that was complete, reliable and inexpensive. Our guide, just published, is all of these. It answers every question that can come up in regard to this new undertaking, as it contains complete instructions and tables, and in addition names and gives the correct unit of every post-office in the United States, and is accompanied by a map of the United States, showing boundaries and numbers of units, with a scale whereby zone measurements may be made between all post-offices.

Because of its reliability this guide is the only one which a bookseller or stationer can safely recommend to a customer, and is the only Parcel Post Guide a customer can afford to buy.

150 pages, about 6 x 8 inches. Price, in paper binding, 25 cents. Price, in cloth binding, 75 cents.

REVERSIBLE MAP OF THE UNITED STATES AND WORLD

Without exception the 1913 edition of this map is the greatest bargain in the map line ever offered to the public. As its name implies, it consists of a map of the United States 60 x 42 inches, printed in colors, on one side of heavy map paper, and a large map of the World on Mollweide's Equivalent Projection printed on the reverse side. Both maps are absolutely down-to-date. On the map of the United States all railroads are indicated and named, and every state, county, county seat and city, all rivers and mountains (with elevations of principal peaks), all steamship lines (including those of the Great Lakes), etc., are also shown. It may be safely said that the Reversible Map contains more information than any similar map extant, and, at the same time, is the only recent Wall Map of this country.

The Map of the World is constructed on the Projection which presents all Areas of the Earth in their correct relative size. It shows all submarine cables, ocean currents, all through railroads, political divisions, principal cities and towns. An index of the islands and list of the principal cities with latest population figures are printed on the margin of the map.

HAMMOND'S POCKET MAPS OF ALL STATES

New and revised edition of this popular series of maps are continually being issued, marked by improvements in features and details. They represent the latest maps of each state available, and for this reason the sales grow larger every month. Price, 15 cents per copy. On sale at all retailers.

NEW SPRING BOOKS FROM THE HOUSE OF McBRIDE, NAST & CO.

Thorney

By ALEXANDER BLACK, Author of "Miss Jerry," "The Girl and the Guardsman," "Richard Gordon," etc.

A girl of eighteen who has been alone on a tropical island for six years—a young man who has been shipwrecked and is cast ashore. That is a bare hint of what this story is about. It suggests adventure, doesn't it? Aside from the admirable manner in which the situation is handled by the author, this novel presents some of the cleverest character portrayal and analysis of recent years. The dialogue sparkles and glows like the embers of a driftwood fire, and the story is by no means dependent on its action alone for the keen interest that is sustained throughout. Frontispiece in full color by ORSON LOWELL. $1.25 net; postage 12c.

GERTRUDE

By EDWARD HUNGERFORD, Author of "Little Corky," "The Modern Railroad," etc.

A story telling first of the rejuvenation of an old country tavern into a comfortable and modern inn and then of the rejuvenation of the family that went into it. The story moves of course, about its central figure, Gertrude, the girl who made herself strong and winsome and then conquered the great tragedy of her own life. As a woman of power and beauty, she is comparable with the character Helena Ritchie, of Mrs. Deland's novel. Throughout there runs a strong love story—indeed, the entire pages are filled with a company of quaint and lovable folk who must have been taken from real life. Colored frontispiece by George Brehm. $1.25 net; postage 11c.

The Children in the Shadow. By ERNEST K. COULTER. The author of this vitally important book was for ten years Clerk of the Children's Court of New York City, and saw 100,000 children pass before the tribunal. From his wide and sympathetic experience he has drawn material for this book about the three delinquents—the State, the parent and the child. The book is constructive as well as analytical, suggesting remedies for the congestion in tenement districts that makes for delinquency among children. There is also a chapter on the Big Brother Movement, of which the author was founder. Illustrated. $1.50 net; postage 15c.

BOOKS OF THE HOUSE AND THE GARDEN

The Dutch Colonial House. By AYMAR EMBURY, II. A well-known architect on the most logical and attractive solution of the problem of securing the most room in a home and the most charming exterior at the minimum cost. Illustrated. $2.00 net; postage 20c.

Reclaiming the Old House. By CHAS. EDW. HOOPER. How an old house may be reclaimed so as to preserve the charm of the past while incorporating the present-day conveniences. With plans, diagrams and photographs. $2.00 net; postage 20c.

Modern Farm Buildings. By ALFRED HOPKINS. The revolution, by modern scientific methods, of the art of building the hay barn, sheepfold, stable, ice-house, dairy, garage and the rest. Illustrated. $3.00 net; postage 20c.

Flower Gardening. By H. S. ADAMS. The most authoritative, up-to-date, practical and complete book on growing flowers yet published. Illustrated. $1.20 net; postage 10c.

Old-fashioned Gardening. By GRACE TABOR. A history of the gardens of old, and directions for making gardens to-day to be in keeping with the houses that have come down to us from the past. Illustrated. $2.00 net; postage 16c.

Lilies. By H. S. ADAMS. The cultivation, peculiarities, and culture of lilies, both indoors and in the garden. Illustrated. $1.00 net; postage 10c.

The Book of Annuals and The Book of Perennials. By HENRY H. SAYLOR. Helps for the amateur gardener in selecting, planting and growing the most dependable among these classes of flowers. Illustrated. Each, $1.00 net; postage 10c.

The Gardener and the Cook. By LUCY H. YATES. The author, having enlisted the coöperation of a clever cook and a capable gardener, tells what vegetables and fruits are profitable to grow, and how to cook them temptingly. Illustrated. $1.25 net; postage 15c.

BOOKS OF TRAVEL

Through Our Unknown Southwest. By AGNES C. LAUT. The Southwestern corner of the United States, practically unknown to travelers, as a playground and mine of romantic, historic and human interest. $2.00 net; postage 16c.

London—An Intimate Picture. By HENRY JAMES FORMAN. Through its interpretative quality this book gives the reader a familiarity with London otherwise unattainable except from a protracted stay. Illustrated. $1.10 net; postage 10c. (One of the Blue Books of Travel.)

Through Siberia, an Empire in the Making. By RICHARDSON L. WRIGHT and BASSETT DIGBY. Adventures and observations of extraordinary interest by two men who crossed Siberia with only one passport between them. Illustrated $2.00 net; postage 16c

Finding the Worth-While in Europe. By ALBERT B. OSBORNE. A guide that not only points out the way to choose the most satisfactory itinerary, but inspires the reader with the true joy of travel. Illustrated. $1.25 net; postage 10c.

Under the Sky in California. By CHARLES FRANCIS SAUNDERS. The deserts, the mountains, and the Indians of California and how the visitor may see them for himself—charmingly written. Illustrated. $2.00 net; postage 16c.

"I hold every man a debtor to his profession, from the which, as men do of course seek to receive countenance and profit, so ought they of duty to endeavor themselves by way of amends to be a help and an ornament thereunto."—BACON.

ARE YOU "TOO BUSY" TO SEE THE TRAVELLING SALESMAN?

How many times have you, as a travelling salesman, sent in your card to a local bookseller and met substantially this rebuff: "No, we don't want anything just now; and I'm too busy to talk to salesmen to-day, anyway. No, I don't want to see your line, and there's no use taking your time and mine to talk about it"?

If you, as a bookseller, have been consistently guilty of such replies to travelling salesmen, couched in howsoever courteous terms, it might be to your advantage to consider what the salesmen, as a class, mean to your business.

Of course, there are times when a man is genuinely busy, too busy, perhaps, to see a salesman or any other individual whose wants are not immediate and imperative. It all depends on the attitude of the bookseller in his refusal: if he looks on the departing traveller as a nuisance well got rid of, his attitude is all wrong; if he views his meeting him as a pleasurable opportunity to secure information regretfully foregone, he has, as a retailer, a proper trade perspective.

For your true travelling salesman is, first, last and all the time, a distributor of live ideas. Is Jones at his "first big town out," running a clever window display of one of the latest best-sellers? Promptly the hint for similar window displays is "passed along the line" to the later buyers he meets. And, if the salesman is a real salesman he doesn't insist that the idea he is thus propagating be strictly one to boom the sale of his own line. Of course, that is what he prefers. He will, if possible, transfer the idea behind that window display to one of his own books. But, at any event, he is going to give that little merchandizing boost to every dealer he meets—who isn't "too busy" to listen to him.

Or, take his own line. There isn't a publishing house that has a right to bear the name which doesn't expend a large amount of thought, energy and cash in devising plans and formulating suggestions for the retail exploitation of its books. Every new publication is analyzed, or should be; its field and appeal defined, methods for its sale worked out. All this work is done in the interest of the bookseller; to the travelling salesman is assigned the work of giving him the benefit of it; the buyer who refuses to see salesmen is simply refusing, nine times out of ten, an opportunity to gain information, the value of which, in the aggregate, can hardly be overestimated.

Remember, too, that the publisher's impressions of your store are largely formed from the reports of his travellers. One well-known specialty buyer in the Middle West remarked, the other day, that he considered the courteous reception of salesmen as important as the courteous reception of customers. "The good will of the travellers means more to me," he said, "from a credit standpoint alone than a mercantile rating; and their advice—yes, their advice—is worth any number of special discounts. I would consider a store policy that antagonizes the trade's travellers a suicidal one."

"It is so easy," comments a writer in a well-known trade journal, "for a dealer to be busy when the travelling man calls, and it seems to be the case often that almost any time could be better given to him than the present. His business is as legitimate as the dealer's. He is working for the goods that he is selling, to be sure, but if the goods are good goods, his efforts in behalf of his own goods are also made for the good of the trade in general. He is not a beggar or a waif on the winds of the trade, pleading for an interview, a chance to show his goods. Often he may be forced to assume such a position, because of the senseless haughtiness of a tradesman. He is in reality the man who keeps the ball rolling."

The publishers' representative is a bearer of news—primarily of his own goods, of course, but, incidentally, of other goods, of other booksellers and of the trade in general. What news of yourself and of your store does he carry away with him? When one estimates the number of cold meals, early trains, tedious waits and prolonged absences from home that are a necessary part of the salesman's lot, it seems hard to add thereto an indefinite number of "grouchy" customers.

THE news that Wallace Cathcart is severing his active connection with the book trade will occasion regret to a wide circle of friends. Word of the change affecting the firm of Burrows Brothers' Company, of which for over sixteen years he had been manager, was soon followed by the notice of Mr. Cathcart's election to the position of director of the Western Reserve Historical Society, this new office being created for the purpose of securing Mr. Cathcart's entire time for developing plans for extending the work of the society. Mr. Cathcart, although still a young man, has been actively engaged in the business of bookselling for over thirty years. His first employment began with the firm of W. S. Wilson, of Elyria, with whom he remained four years. Later on, going through college, he served as college librarian, which training was to prove valuable later, when, abandoning the idea of teaching as a profession, he went to Cleveland at the request of the old firm of Taylor-Austin Co., with whom he remained seven years as secretary. Leaving this firm, Mr. Cathcart associated himself with the Burrows Brothers' Company, where for sixteen years he managed the book department of this business, and for the past six years he has acted as general manager of this well-known and highly esteemed firm.

FROM its inception to the present time, Mr. Cathcart has been identified with the American Booksellers' Association, and he has in the past given largely of his support and his time to the success of this institution, filling with felicity the office of president and vice-president. The present success of the association is due to the loyal courage and steadfast support of a little more than a dozen booksellers, who contributed their money and their faith to the cause of honest and self-respecting bookselling in the face of an almost overwhelming apathy and mistrust on the part of publisher and bookseller alike. Prominent among this small band of idealists was Mr. Cathcart. To the travelling men in particular was Mr. Cathcart well known. An unfailing courtesy marked his reception of them, and if his orders were sometimes disappointing (and whose are not?), at least the traveller felt that his proposition had been intelligently judged by a man whose high-minded sense of loyalty to his house earned their sometimes unwilling respect. His many friends will watch with interest the development of the Western Reserve Historical Society under his management, and will wish him many years of usefulness in his new field.

Now that the Philadelphia and, last of all, Boston associations of booksellers are successful realities, it is proper to move that Chicago join the ranks. A Chicago Booksellers' League—it sounds well!—and those who have enjoyed these fourteen years the friendly associations, the trade advice, the spoken encouragement and unvoiced enthusiasm that the New York Booksellers' League has brought to its members, know that the Chicago league would do more than sound well; it would be an active force for trade advancement and uplift, not merely in Chicago, but all through the Middle West, a great territory, whose wealth and importance, from a bookbuying standpoint, can hardly be overvalued. To the new Boston league, the PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY extends its most cordial congratulations; may it "live long and prosper." From a book publishing and bookselling standpoint, Boston may be fairly said to rank next to New York in importance; launched so auspiciously, its new booktrade association will undoubtedly be worthy of its name.

PICK-UPS.

"I AM TOO BUSY."

A BUSY man is never too busy to attend to business. He takes the time to see everybody that calls to see him. That doesn't mean that he has to hand around cigars and sit idly blowing rings of smoke from his fragrant Havana, or pass hours discussing politics or indulging in idle gossip.

A really busy man creates an atmosphere about him that invites brevity of conversation and a short stay. The busy man takes time to attend to every detail in the routine of his daily duties, and he does it thoughtfully and methodically. He never allows his absorption in business to interfere with his genial good nature. There is a heartiness in his greeting to everyone who comes into contact with his sunny, busy presence.

The "too busy to see you" fellows, under their thin veneering and seeming activities simply advertise their own inefficiency and their very limited mental capacity.—L. M. CROSS, in the Vir Publishing Company's "Successful Selling."

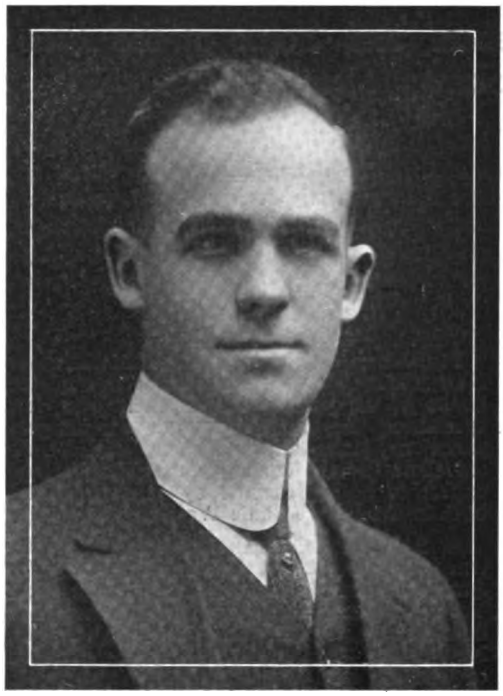
Spring Lines of the Publishers and Some of the Men Who Will Show Them.

Information for the trade of the territory covered by the travellers of whom we have been able to collect data, with short sketches of some of them and a brief description of the lines carried by them. These descriptions have been generally confined to the so-called "competitive" lines, the cheaper series, "rebinds," "juvenile series" and novelties, though in some cases notice has been given of other books which their publishers intend specially to push. In cases where no mention is found the information was not forthcoming from the publishers.

HENRY ALTEMUS COMPANY.
Travellers: L. G. Nourse, A. M. Macmillan, H. R. Kurtzman.

D. APPLETON & COMPANY'S varied spring list includes: "The American Year Book for 1912," edited by Francis G. Wickware, a digest of progress and achievement in every field of human activity during the past year; the final volume of John Bach McMaster's "History of the People of the United States"; "The Flowery Republic," by Frederick McCormick, special correspondent at Peking; "French Prophets of Yesterday," a study of religious thought under the Second Empire, by Albert Leon Guèrard; "Romances of the French Theatre," by Francis Gribble; "Robespierre and the Women he Loved," by Hector Fleischmann; "All the Days of My Life; an Autobiography," by Amelia E. Barr, the well-known novelist; "Woman and To-Morrow," by W. L. George; "The Vatican," by Rt. Rev. E. C. H. de Ragnan and G. Jollivet; "The Psychology of Laughter," by Boris Sidis; "The Social Meaning of Education," by Irving King; "Industrial and Manufacturing Chemistry," by Geoffrey Martin; a number of books on accounting; "Camping for Girls," by Jeanette Marks; and many other volumes. Among their novels are works by Robert W. Chambers, Elinor Glyn, George Gibbs, Thomas Dixon, who draws a full-length portrait of Lincoln in "The Southerner"; Baroness von Hutten, Josephine Daskam Bacon, Joseph C. Lincoln, E. Temple Thurston, Sir Arthur T. Quiller-Couch, Cleveland Moffett, collaborating with Oliver Herford, David Graham Phillips, Sarah Grand and a number more—undoubtedly an exceptionally strong fiction list. Barbour's "The Junior Trophy," and Altsheler's "The Texan Scouts," are juvenile offerings.
Travellers: Emil Heikel (large cities of the Middle West and the Pacific coast); Paul Florin (the South and the balance of the West); Robert Brady (New England, New York and Pennsylvania); F. A. Clinch (Boston, Philadelphia and Canada).



THE BAKER & TAYLOR CO. Mr. Wessels expects to cover the country pretty well with a line of remainders. The firm has purchased and has in stock at the present time over 100,000 volumes of books of this character, which they are prepared to sell in small quantities to dealers at a very slight advance over their cost to them.

Travellers: William S. McKeachie will cover New York City with the regular line of the books of all publishers and their own few specialties. Beyond this, the house is not prepared to make any statement about their travellers for the coming year, although they expect to be represented by seven or eight, both in the East, Middle West and Far West.

A. S. BARNES COMPANY are offering to the trade this year "The Handicraft Book," by Anne L. Jessup, director of hand work, New York City, and Annie M. Logue, teacher of domestic art, Washington Irving High School, New York. The volume comprises methods of teaching cord and raffia constructive work, weaving, basketry and chair-caning in graded school; it is planned for a three-years' course, and connects kindergarten activities with the more advanced construction of the primary grade. Another important volume on the Barnes list, "Play Songs," from the Song Series, by Alys E. Bentley, with piano accompaniments by Harvey Worthington Loomis, consists of songs within the range of the interest and experience of the average child, which will develop the proper use of the vocal organs without effort.
Traveller: Laurens Maynard.

BARSE & HOPKINS have considerably augmented their line of gift books and books of popular interest. "Roses from Sadi's Garden" is a new translation by Captain Celwyn E. Hampton, U. S. A., of the Persian poet philosopher, Maslah-Ud-din Sa'di Al Shinazi. The verses are rendered largely in the same meter as the FitzGerald translation of the "Rubaiyat." The book is to be put forth in two bindings of cloth and of velvet calf. The pages are decorated with tinted borders of roses. So great was last year's success of Barse & Hopkins' anthologies, "To My Mother" and "To My Home," that they are this year bringing out two companion books, "To My Pal" and "To My Dad." Hildric Davenport's "The Opinion Shop" sparkles with epigrammatic shafts of humor. Robert W. Service's "Spell of the Yukon" and "Ballads of a Cheechako" have, by their ever constantly increasing popularity, made necessary a "Pocket Edition." This has been daintily prepared in paste grain covers of red leather and of velvet calf. Along the same line as the two foregoing titles, Barse & Hopkins are for the first time offering "The Men Who Blaze the Trail," by Sam C. Dun-

WILLIAM HALDANE, JR

Representing Barse & Hopkins.

WILLIAM HALDANE, JR., of Barse & Hopkins, is one of the younger set of traveling salesmen. He started in business as stock boy for Raphael Tuck & Sons, and remained with that house for seven years, working his way up until his last two years of service with that house were as one of their representatives on the road. January 1, 1912, he joined the traveling force of Barse & Hopkins as their Southern and New England representative. His success with them has been phenomenal.

ham. Mr. Dunham is another poet like Mr. Service, who has dared the perils of the frozen North. The book has an introduction by Joaquin Miller. "Baby's Life," a baby book, is illustrated by a comparatively new artist, Miss H. Von Hartman; "My Christmas List," a book for utilitarian purposes, provides for a record of gifts given to and received from one's various friends, so as to prevent duplication and embarrassing situations on future occasions; "My Book of Blessings," especially adapted for commencement purposes, contains verses by its author-illustrator, with appropriate page decorations in two colors. The practical arts are represented by "The Automobile Instructor," "Motor Car Mechanics for Beginners," and "Driving a Motorcar," all written in the popular, semi-scientific manner, simple enough for beginners yet comprehensive. "The Book of Health and Strength" is a self-explanatory title, as is also the "Practical House Painter." "The Family Record" is a book for those with a taste for genealogy, or having an interest or pride in tracing their ancestry, or preserving a history of one's present generation for those to come. A number of additions have been made to their series of popular classics, both in new titles and new bindings. The Copley Series is comprised of the works of twelve American, English and French authors, bound in mottled vellum, gilt top and titles stamped in gold. Four new titles by James Allen have been added to the already popular Golden Books. The Netherland Series is another vellum bound group of classics which have a unique feature in a special novelty back. Four new titles have been added to the Savoy Series, and the Relyea Classics have also been added to with new titles. The Students' Classics, a new idea, consists of cloth-bound, popular-priced books of pocket size on good paper. The series contains fifteen of the most popular titles by well-known authors. It is the intention to add to this series until it will contain every author and title worthy of note. The Birthday Books Series in cloth, red leather, Persian ooze and velvet calf has now been increased to nine titles. The Biltmore Series, containing fifteen titles, is bound in art vellum and boxed. The popular Carleton Series, velvet calf classics, has been increased by four new titles. A pebbled calf binding is an innovation introduced in the Raleigh Series. The titles are taken entirely from prominent American and English authors. The new Gems of Thought Series, bound in both vellum and in Persian ooze, is decorated and printed in two colors from hand designed motto plates. The Truth Books consist of a set of four titles, by Ella E. and Mary A. Dodson, bound in cloth and Persian ooze. These are books of an "inspirational" character. The James Allen Books consist of six of this author's best writings bound in cloth. The Christmas Classics and the Plaza Series as well as the Touraine Series have had new titles added this year. Barse & Hopkins' leather books will hereafter be bound with a patented tubular back, which allows the full opening of the book without the possibility of the binding breaking. It is the same principle that has been used in the celebrated "Bagster'" and "Cambridge" Bibles. In addition to the foregoing, Barse & Hopkins will still act as sole selling agents for the Hayes Lithographing Company, of Buffalo, N. Y., whose booklets are described elsewhere in this issue.

Travellers: J. H. Hopkins; Charles B. Nourse; William Haldane, Jr.; John V. I. Wood.

THE BOBBS-MERRILL COMPANY believe that whosoever claims that romance is dead will find strong contradiction in their spring line of novels. Although the love plots are widely different, a romance is the central theme in each of the stories. "Seven Keys to Baldpate" is a bright comedy novel by a new American humorist, Earl Derr Biggers. "War," by John Luther Long, is a romance of the Civil War, with a setting in rural Maryland, marked by the style, emotional appeal and popular interest which characterized "Madame Butterfly." As a tale of the road, "The Impossible Boy," by Nina Wilcox Putnam, tells a story new and bright. I. A. R. Wylie has a novel in the list—"The Daughter of Brahma"—a story of England and India, with the pathos of the enmity and discord that exist between the forever-separated East and West. "The Lovers of Skye," by Frank Waller Allen, is the story of the regeneration of romance in a little Kentucky hamlet. A new edition of "John O' Jamestown," a Vaughan Kester novel, will also be published. Although an earlier work than "The Prodigal Judge," it possesses many of the literary qualities which distinguish that immense success. "Andrew the Glad," another Tennessee story by Maria Thompson Daviess, takes its place among the popular romances, while the vogue of "The Melting of Molly," Miss Daviess' success of last year, is still at its height.

Digitized by Google

THE BOOK SUPPLY COMPANY report that "Their Yesterdays," from publication day to the first of January, almost equalled the unprecedented sale of "Barbara Worth" for the same period of the year previous. The popularity of "Their Yesterdays" is fast increasing, and from all indications it will prove the most popular book that Harold Bell Wright has yet written. The publishers are determined to continue to further its sale in every possible judicious manner, and have decided to put no overshadowing book in its way. Therefore, as final and conclusive, they announce that there will be no new book of any description by Harold Bell Wright published this year.

Travellers: The Reilly & Britton Co. are the publishers' selling agents to the trade throughout the United States.

BRENTANO'S have ready seven volumes of the new edition of their Classics in Art Series, and promise eight more for the coming year. Each volume gives a biographical introduction and reproductions of every known picture by the artist, together with its size and present location. In Bernard Shaw's books, this firm has a list always in demand.

F. G. BROWNE & Co. announce that "The Lapse of Enoch Wentworth," by Isabel Gordon Curtis, is now in its third edition, two editions having been printed before its publication day. Mrs. Kate A. Aplington's "Pilgrims of the Plains" is being well received—a tribute to a new author. "The Stain," by Forrest Halsey, was dramatized and produced by the Liebler Company in New York early this month and bids fair to become one of the season's big dramatic successes. "The Turn of the Sword," by C. MacLean Savage, presents a word-picture of feudal Japan, and the Kinneys have faithfully portrayed the author's descriptions. Mrs. General Pickett's little book, "The Bugles of Gettysburg" will be most timely, owing to the fact that this is the fiftieth anniversary year of the great battle. It will be published some time in April.

FRANK L. HOWELL (JUNIOR PARTNER).

Representing F. G. Browne & Co.

FRANK L. HOWELL, for several years past has traveled for A. C. McClurg & Company, latterly representing them in the larger eastern cities. On January 1, 1913, he, in partnership with F. G. Browne, former head of the publishing interests of McClurg's, assisted in establishing the new publishing house of F. G. Browne & Company, he being the junior partner. Mr. Browne will take entire charge of the manufacturing and Mr. Howell will have charge of the selling force, covering the principal cities of the East himself.

It is not often that a new firm has its first two books exhaust two editions each before publication day. This is what happened to F. G. Browne & Co.

Travellers: P. A. Powers, formerly of Bridgman & Lyman, Northampton, Mass., will travel the Middle West, South and New England territory. The Pacific coast territory will be taken care of by Laurens Maynard.

A. L. BURT COMPANY have a long line of recent $1.50 copyright fiction, reprinted and bound in attractive cloth covers, to retail at 50 cents. The February and March additions are: "The Land of Long Ago," by Eliza Calvert Hall; "Initials Only," by Anna Katharine Green; "Routledge Rides Alone," by Will Levington Comfort; "The Rose of Old Harpeth," by Maria Thompson Daviess; "Polly of the Circus," by Margaret Mayo; "The Missioner," by E. Phillips Oppenheim; "The Sheriff of Dyke Hole," by Ridgwell Cullum;

CHARLES B. STEELE

Representing the A. L. Burt Co.

CHARLES B. STEELE, who has so long represented the A. L. Burt Company in the Southern territory and on the Pacific Coast, is one of the quiet, modest members of the traveling fraternity who during his twenty years of "road work" has formed many close friendships among the booksellers. He was born in the southland and for some years lived in Dallas, from which point he carried on commission a number of publishers' lines throughout Texas and parts adjacent. Gradually these were dropped, until about fifteen years ago he made his headquarters in New York. Since then his travels have been almost exclusively for the A. L. Burt Company. His only side line now is James Pott & Co.'s Bibles, which he shows to the southern trade.

"Phillip Steele," by James Oliver Curwood; "How Leslie Loved," by Anne Warner; "A Passage Perilous," by Rosa N. Carey; "The Man in the Brown Derby," by Wells Hastings; "Prince or Chauffeur," by Lawrence Perry; "The Carpet from Bagdad," by Harold MacGrath; "My Lady Caprice," by Jeffery Farnol, author of "The Broad Highway"; "Happy Island," sequel to "Uncle William," by Jennette Lee; "Jeanne of the Marshes," by E. Phillips Oppenheim; "Bar-20 Days," by Clarence E. Mulford; "Susan Clegg and Her Friend, Mrs. Lathrop," by Anne Warner; "The Two-Gun Man," by Charles Alden Seltzer; "The Golden Web," by Anthony Partridge; "The Yellow Letter," by William Johnston; "The Skyman," by Henry Ketchell Webster; "The Household of Peter," by Rosa N. Carey; and "Mademoiselle Celeste," by Adele Ferguson Knight.

Travellers: Charles B. Steele (South and Pacific coast); Theodore A. Jasper (Central part of the United States, from New York to Kansas and Nebraska); Thomas J. McLaughlin (Northern section of United States, from Portland, Me., to Michigan); John C. Vose (North Middle section of the United States, from New York to Minnesota); McLeod and Allen (Canadian Provinces); Alfred Coleman (Western territory).

H. M. CALDWELL CO. are making special efforts with their "Commencement Book" lines this spring, new and up-to-date editions of their memory books, and a new series of appropriate gift books in attractive bindings for the "Sweet Girl Graduate" are offered. Their "Commencement Book" catalogue is now ready and will be sent upon request. For the holiday season, many new features are contemplated by this house, to whom the trade have come to look for attractive books for children and original novelties in gift books, as well as popular and standard literature, including the Handy Volume Classics, which they will have this year in a variety of new bindings. Among the leading features is a new series, The Triumph of Enterprise, which purposes to tell the story of the wonderful achievements of human enterprise and to set forth the marvels of science and nature. The first two volumes, ready in June, will be "Conquests of Engineering" and "Wood and What We Make of It," both by Cyril Hall. The books will be generously illustrated. The line of children's books has been augmented by many new titles and series. The sixth issue of Caldwell's Boys and Girls at Home will appear, all new from cover to cover. "Sambo and Susanna," by E. Parkinson; "Picture Book of Animals," "Jolly Animal Tales" and "My Book of Good Stories" are some of the leading additions to their lines for little folks. A new series, The Children's Hour, is composed of twenty-one titles of bed-time stories for the very little ones. The leading book for girls will be "The Youngest Sister," by Bessie Marchant. "Kidnapped by the Moors," a story of Morocco, and "A Boy of the Dominion," a tale of Canadian life, are new books by Captain F. S. Brereton, the successor of Henty. There will be additional titles to their Popular Birthday Books, with new gift books and books of humor, announcement of which will be made later. Special mention should be made of their new Berkeley Series, bound in velvet Persian, a novelty in cover effect. It is sold at a popular price. As usual, many novel effects in leather bindings are offered this year.

Travellers: A. D. MacMullen, John J. Coakley, Jr., James F. Weston, and Adolph Davidson (United States and Canada); John I. Lothian (Australia and New Zealand).

CASSELL & COMPANY announce novels by Theodore G. Roberts, T. W. Hanshew, Newman Flower, Warwick Deeping, Richard Marsh, Helen Wallace, and others, as well as an anonymous work, "Princess Mary's Locked Book." In nature study their line is strong this year, including books by G. C. Nuttall, H. H. Thomas, H. J. Jeffery, and others. "Panama and What It Means," by John Foster Fraser, treats its subject from the commercial, sociological and economic viewpoints. The house has well-selected offerings in religion, sociology, art and other branches.

Travellers: Represented in the larger cities by Francis Sloane, and in the East and Middle Western cities by Robert Brady. Laurens Maynard, as usual, will take care of the coast trade.

THE CENTURY COMPANY announce, among their publications for the spring: "The Shadow," a detective and mystery story, by Arthur Stringer; "The Night Born" and "The Abysmal Brute," two volumes by Jack London, the latter a vigorous story of the prize-ring; "The American Spirit," a volume of essays, by Oscar S. Straus; "Zone Policeman No. 88," an account of Harry A. Franck's experiences for five months in the Canal Zone, first as census-taker and then as plainclothes policeman, a volume promising well, in view of the present interest in Panama; and new volumes of stories by Anne Douglas Sedgwick and Owen Johnson.

Travellers: George L. Wheelock, John F. Winters and Frederick W. Owen (special representative on the Pacific coast and west of Denver).

THE H. B. CLAFLIN COMPANY book department continue Black's Color Books. They have a large variety at prices much reduced. A popular edition of the Every Child Should Know Series, twenty volumes, will be ready in March. This series is made for them by Doubleday, Page & Company. The contents of the volumes are exactly the same as the regular trade edition sold at much higher prices. Claflin will also have a popular edition of Great Marvels and Masterpieces of the World, edited by Esther Singleton, fourteen volumes. These are made for them by Dodd, Mead & Company. Remainders, as everybody knows, are the chief factor in the Claflin book business. They have now a collection of books on art and allied subjects, quite remarkable for its scope. Other classes of books are shown in unprecedented variety.

Travellers: Frank L. Magel (New York); John R. Fraser and Harry F. Hull (other large cities); William C. Schwab (smaller cities).

THOMAS Y. CROWELL & COMPANY'S announcements include travel books, juveniles, holiday books illustrated in color, Marden "Efficiency" books, booklets, anthologies, year books, poets, handy volumes, Bible paper sets, and leather novelties in varied and up-to-date styles.

Travellers: William R. Spinney (Pacific coast, New York City, Philadelphia, Washington); George R. Hobby (Boston, Pittsburgh, Chicago, Cleveland, St. Louis, Cincinnati, St. Paul and New York State); Frank C. Dixon (all of the South and portions of the West and New England); Ernest J. Bunce (Pennsylvania and Middle States); Kenneth E. Palmer (Northwest and portions of Pacific coast); McLeod and Allen (all Canadian points).

CUPPLES & LEON COMPANY are adding new titles and bringing out new series on a more extensive scale than ever before. The Racer Boys Series, by Clarence Young, rapidly gaining in popularity on the well-known Motor Boys Series, by the same author, will have two new titles. Clarence Young will also add another volume in the best-selling Motor Boys Series. There will be new volumes in the College Sports Series, the Banner Boy Scouts Series, the Baseball Joe Series and the Great

JOHN J. COAKLEY, JR.

Representing H. M. Caldwell Company.

JOHN J. COAKLEY, JR., is a Philadelphia boy and a graduate of Wanamaker's Book Department. He was for a year with J. R. Weldin & Co., Pittsburgh, but returned to the Wanamaker house and his friend and mentor, Warren Snyder. Later, on an impulse to see the West, and the coast, he journeyed to Seattle and accepted a position in the Book Department of the Lowman & Hanford Co. January, 1911, found him again in the East, as traveler for W. J. Watt & Co., and a year later he joined the hustling staff of Dana Estes & Co. and the H. M. Caldwell Co. This year he makes the coast trip to relieve Al MacMullen, and he earnestly hopes to follow in the footsteps and good fortune of that great and good veteran of the road.

HARRY F. HULL

Representing the H. B. Claflin Co.

HARRY F. HULL, who is now with the Book Department of the H. B. Claflin Company, received his earliest experience in the book business in the office of G. P. Putnam's Sons, by whom he was employed for four years. He then joined the traveling staff of Dodd, Mead & Company, with which house he remained twelve years. His extensive acquaintance with the trade the country over will stand him in good stead in his new capacity, as he plans an extensive trip this year, visiting nearly every State in the Union.

Marvel Series. The girls will not be neglected, for a new title each will be added to the Dorothy Dale Series and the Motor Girls Series. A line for very young children is the Sunbonnet Series, in which four illustrated volumes are being issued at attractive prices. The Little Classics Series should prove a popular line of gift books. They are bound in art covers, are well illustrated, and comprise such titles as "Christmas Carol," "Sohrab and Rustum," "Gray's Elegy," and the like. A high-class line of cloth-bound quarto picture books has also been added to the list, at prices ranging between one and two dollars. Cupples & Leon Company have, in addition, secured the selling rights in the United States to a very fine line of Christmas cards, already famous in England. A volume on "Easy Dressmaking" is in preparation for early publication. A new Buster Brown Book will be issued, and the popular pictures of "Mr. Twee Deedle" will be published in book form for the first time. In Dean's Rag Books, for which Cupples & Leon Company are the United States agents, several changes have been made and new titles added.

Travellers: A. T. Leon, V. W. Cupples, W. M. Edwards, S. George Engel and M. F. Gallon.

G. W. DILLINGHAM COMPANY announces for early spring issue "The Master of the House," from the play of Edgar James, novelized by Edward Marshall; "The Suttee of Safa," a Hindoo romance, by Dulcie Deamer; "The Souls of Men," by Martha M. Stanley; "Her Right Divine," by Oliver Kent; "Faro Nell and Her Friends" (a new "Wolfville" story), by Alfred Henry Lewis; "The Voice of the Heart," by Margaret Blake, author of "The Greater Joy"; "Isles in Summer Seas—Beautiful Bermuda," by J. Law Redman—a book of rambles through the Bermuda isles, illustrated with 100 characteristic and intimate glimpses of these rambles; "Crooked Trails and Straight," by William MacLeod Raine; "Udara, Prince of Bidur," a romance of India, by Arthur J. Westermayr, author of "Rudra." The Dillingham list of popular copyrights now numbers 318 titles.

Travellers: Alban P. Roche, Joseph G. Young.

DODD, MEAD & COMPANY issued "My Little Sister," by Elizabeth Robins, early in 1913. This story discusses in an original and effective manner a problem always before us. Appearing in a greatly abbreviated form in McClure's—about one-third of it was published there—it attracted the greatest attention. As a book its success has been as great. Reginald Wright Kauffman, the well-known author, will be represented in Dodd, Mead & Company's list this spring by "Running Sands," a novel in which he deals with the problem of an old husband and a young wife. "The Weaker Vessel," by E. F. Benson, who became famous as the author of "Dodo," is the story of a woman who combines genius and a lovely disposition and upon whom fate bestows a husband who is also a genius and has an unlovable disposition. "Until the Day Break," by W. L. George, is the story of one of the many workers who emigrate to this country to secure freedom and not finding it become agitators, socialists and anarchists. "The Gloved Hand" is still another in Burton E. Stevenson's long line of detective stories. Henry C. Rowland's "The Apple of Discord" is a novel for summer reading, somewhat on the lines of Robert W. Chambers' shorter and lighter books of fiction. "The Heart of Night Wind," by Vingie E. Roe, who made her debut as an author last year with "The Maid of the Whispering Hills," is the story of land claims and lumbermen in the Oregon forests. In "The Poisoned Pen" Arthur B. Reeve, whose work is well known to readers of magazines, continues the adventures of Craig Kennedy, the scientific detective. The Rev. Cyrus Townsend Brady has written a stirring tale of Rome in the days of Nero, in which the interest centers around a Roman centurion, a young British girl captive and St. Paul. "The Lost Million," by Winthrop Alden—not his real name, by the way, but a nom de plume with which he wishes to test the popularity of his work—is the story of lost property worth a million dollars and the exciting adventures connected with its recovery. "Come Rack! Come Rope!" by Father Hugh Benson, is an historical novel of the days of Queen Elizabeth. "The White Hound," by Frances Forbes-Robertson, sister of the distinguished English actor, Johnston Forbes-Robertson, presents the case of a brilliant girl whose personality at times underwent remarkable changes. The following books of travel will be published: "Alaska: an Empire in the Making," by John J. Underwood; "Hawaii, Past and Present," by W. R. Castle, Jr.; and "A Gentle Jehu in Japan," by Ethel L. McLean. The great French naturalist, J. H. Fabre, discovered late in life, will be represented by a new book, "The Life of the Spider." Julia B. DeForest's "A Short History of Art," standard for many years, will be edited, revised and largely rewritten by Charles Henry Caffin, one of the best known art critics and best known writers on art in this country. Prof. D. Cady Eaton, of Yale University, has issued a handbook on "Modern French Sculpture," somewhat like his book on "Modern French Painting." An interesting book both to specialists and the general reader is "The Immigrant Invasion," by Frank Julian Warne, one of the best informed men in the country on questions of immigration. He has served for a number of years as secretary of the Immigration Department of the National Civic Federation, and also of the New York State Immigration Commission, and was special expert of the United States Census Bureau on our foreign-born population. Elizabeth Robins, whose new book, "My Little Sister," has already been referred to, has written a book on the problems of woman suffrage called "Way Stations." Other publications will be: "Christianity and Commerce, a Study in Western Expansion," by Rev. Frank Ilsley Paradise; "Manual for Heart Patients," by J. H. Honan, M.D.; "The Three Gifts of Life, a Girl's Responsibility for Race Progress," by Nellie M. Smith; "Royal Auction Bridge Up to Date," by H. P. Clark; "Bringing Up the Boy," by Carl Werner.

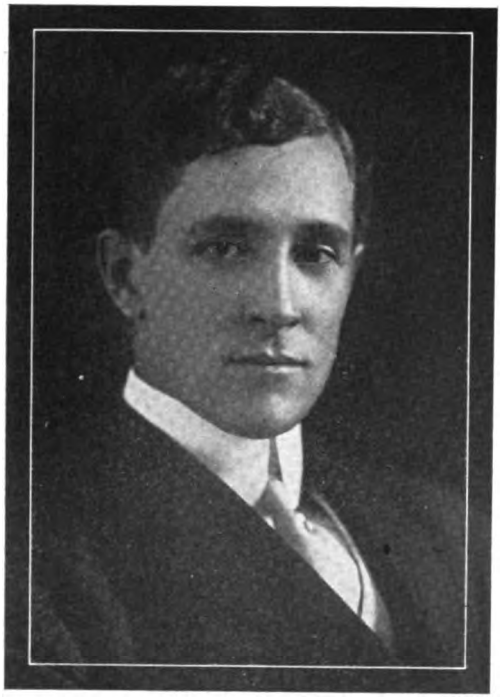
Travellers: F. C. Dodd (Chicago, Boston, Philadelphia, Cleveland, Detroit, Milwaukee, St. Paul, Minneapolis); Harry M. Snyder (Texas, Pacific coast, New York, New England, Baltimore, Washington, and the larger cities in the Middle West); Ralph E. DeWitt (South, and the smaller cities in New York, Pennsylvania and the Middle West).

DODGE PUBLISHING COMPANY. Many new books are planned for 1913. Notable among the spring books will be a new series entitled Variations of Christian Faith. "Congregationalism" and "Unitarianism" will be the first two volumes issued. "Noble Women," by C. C. Cairns; "The Uncommon Commoner," by Edmund Vance Cooke; "Poems by Adam Lindsay Gordon"; "Laugh Again," a humorous volume by Dr. Kieffer; "Rationalism" and "Pragmatism," new volumes in the Philosophies Ancient and Modern; and a dozen new volumes in the very popular People's Books Series are forthcoming. For the holiday season this house has a large line of new, attractive children's books, as well as many volumes of miscellaneous literature and art. Especially inviting will be their showing of bindings in gift books, and a distinct addition will be a number of volumes specially bound in hand-tooled leather by their "leathersmiths." New designs and styles are announced for the famous Calendar of Cheer Series, the best known calendars in the world. Special attention is directed to the fact that nearly all their well-known titles are protected by trade-mark in addition to copyright. Jessie Willcox Smith, Maxfield Parrish, Gibson and Bessie



ERNEST J. BUNCE

Representing the T. Y. Crowell Co.

ERNEST J. BUNCE, with the house of Thomas Y. Crowell Company, started in the book business with James Pott & Company in 1905. When made a traveler he covered the middle West. Mr. Bunce severed his connection with this firm in 1908 to enter other lines of trade, but the strong "call" of the publishing business brought him back to his early choice. In 1910 he united with the traveling force of the T. Y. Crowell Company, covering his former territory in the middle West, with many additions. Mr. Bunce is a young man of pleasing address, optimistic views and of sterling character, and makes friends and trade wherever duty calls him.

LEWIS B. WESTBROOK

Representing the Dodge Publishing Co.

LEWIS B. WESTBROOK started his business career as a stock boy with the Pilgrim Press in Chicago, in 1896. In 1903 he took charge of the Retail Department of the United Presbyterian Board, Pittsburgh, filling this position with marked success. Early in 1906 he was offered a position as head of the Retail Department of the Presbyterian Board, Philadelphia, which post he filled successfully for five years. Fifteen good years in the retail business qualified him for a road career, and on receiving an offer from the Dodge Publishing Company he joined their sales force two years ago. His diversified territory includes the Pacific Coast, part of Ohio, Pennsylvania and New England.

Collins Pease are among the names of the prominent illustrators who furnish calendars for this house. A new hand-colored line of Gift Cards of Elegance hand-made at the "House of Cheer," the celebrated Golden Series of booklets, motto cards, leather desk sets, photo cases, visiting lists, hand-tooled in the leathersmith shops department, are among the novelties. Prominent in the print department will be the new pictures by Maxfield Parrish and other well-known artists. For many years a specialty has been made of manufacturing calendar pads for calendar manufacturers, and this year over 250 varieties are shown with large type figures.

Travellers: John C. Hill (large towns from Boston to St. Paul and St. Louis); L. B. Westbrook (Pacific coast and New England); E. W. Van Wagenen (South and from Ohio and Michigan East); Lennox Clifton (Middle West); T. C. Lothian (New Zealand and Australia); W. C. Bell (small towns in Canada and Canadian Northwest).

GEORGE H. DORAN COMPANY'S spring list for 1913 has both quality and variety. On it are many miscellaneous volumes of great interest, such as: "George Frederick Watts: the Annals of an Artist's Life," in three volumes, by M. S. Watts, his wife; "Lost in the Arctic," the story of the "Alabama" expedition of 1909-1912, by Captain Ejnar Mikkelsen, author of "Conquering the Arctic Ice"; "In the Shadow of the Bush," by P. Amaury Talbot, an enlightening and vivid story of wild Africa, profusely illustrated; "France from Within," by Claire de Pratz, which describes the ways and customs of the French people in their family and social life; "The Private Life of Henry Maitland," by Morley Roberts, the tragic life, thinly disguised, of one of England's great novelists—a book which has created a furore in America and England on account of its relentless frankness; "Modern Problems," a discussion of debatable subjects, by Sir Oliver Lodge, the great English scientist; "The Case of Oscar Slater," an investigation of a real crime, by Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, author of "The Lost World," "Sherlock Holmes," etc.; "The Upholstered Cage," the case of the unmarried daughter, by Josephine P. Knowles; and "The Clock that had No Hands," Herbert Kaufman's essays on advertising. "The Blindness of Virtue," by Cosmo Hamilton, an arraignment of the habit of bringing young people up in ignorance of the fundamental facts of life, represents the drama; and Herbert Kaufman's "Poems," and "The Hand of God," by Max Shoop, an appreciation of Rodin's great statue, are new volumes of verse. "'Twixt Land and Sea," by Joseph Conrad, is one of the important works of fiction of the year. Other novels on the list are: "The Lee Shore," by Rose Macaulay, a $5000 competition prize novel; "The Red Hand of Ulster," by G. A. Birmingham, dealing with an Irish rebellion and particularly timely on account of the renewed interest in the Irish Home Rule bill: "The Browns," by J. E. Buckrose, author of "The Bachelor's Comedy," "Down Our Street," etc.; "Yonder," by E. H. Young; "The Story of Stephen Compton," by J. E. Patterson, a powerful novel, dealing with present-day industrial conditions; "The King's Blue Riband," by Beth Ellis, an historical romance; "The Motto of Mrs. McLane," a charming story of a Mrs. Wiggs of the West; "The Chequer-Board," by Lady Sybil Grant, daughter of the Earl of Rosebery; "The Makeshift Marriage," by Mrs. Baillie-Reynolds, author of "Out of the Night," etc.; "Success," by Una Silberrad; "A Dream of Blue Roses," by Mrs. Hubert Barclay, author of "Trevor Lordship"; "Bunch Grass," by H. A. Vachell, pictures of California ranch life thirty years ago; "The Long Engagement," by Ethel S. Stevens, author of "The Lure," "The Veil," etc.; "Greater Love Hath No Man," by Frank

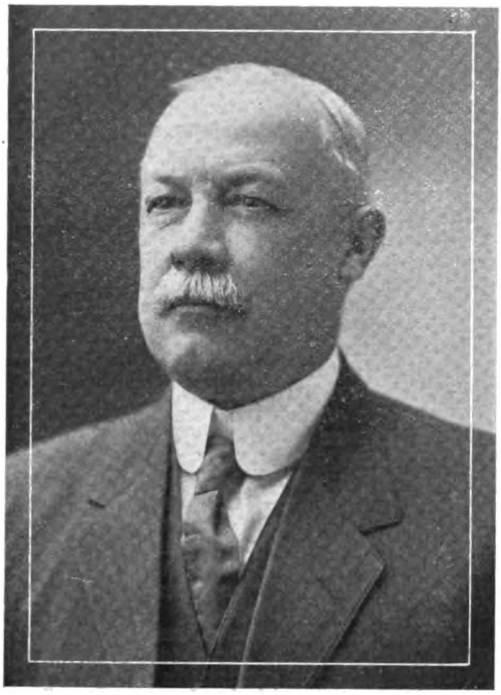
L. Packard, a new but highly promising Canadian novelist; "The Jumping-off Place," a Western story, by Ethel Shackelford; "The Happy Family," by Frank Swinnerton, author of "The Casement," etc.; and "In accordance with the Evidence" and "The Debit Account," two new related novels by Oliver Onions, author of "The Exception," etc. On February 15 the George H. Doran Company inaugurated a series of popular standard novels with the issue of sixteen titles, including recent works by Arnold Bennett, G. A. Birmingham, Antonio Fogazzaro, Baroness Orczy, Mrs. Baillie-Reynolds, Horace Annesley Vachell, and other representative contemporary novelists. In the religious list, too, are included many important new books: "The Official Life of General Booth of the Salvation Army," by G. S. Railton, his first commissioner; "Marriage: Its Ethics and Religion," by P. T. Forsyth; "The Great Acceptance," by Guy Thorne, the life story of the great evangelist worker, F. M. Charrington; "Wesley's World Parish," by George C. Findlay and Mary Grace Findlay, a sketch of the hundred years' work of the Wesleyan Methodist Missionary Society; "The Spiritual Interpretation of Nature," by James Y. Simpson; "The Elements of Child Study and Religious Pedagogy," by Rev. William Walter Smith; "The Life and Letters of Rev. James MacGregor, D.D.," by the Lady Frances Balfour; and "Great Ideas of Religion," by J. G. Simpson, D.D., author of "Christian Ideals," "Christus Crucifixus," etc.



Travellers: J. W. Corrigan (New York, Boston, Philadelphia and other cities); H. R. Drake (Chicago and the Pacific coast and in all religious bookselling houses); R. N. Hays (Southern States, Middle West and New England); E. H. Ziegler (New York State, Pennsylvania, and smaller cities in Middle West and New England).

Doubleday, Page & Company announce a list of unusually broad scope this spring. Booth Tarkington's "The Flirt" promises to be one of the most popular books of the year. Mrs. Humphry Ward's new romance, "The Mating of Lydia," is the story of the struggle of two men to win the same girl. "An Affair of State" is by J. C. Snaith, the well-known author of "Broke of Covenden" and "The Principal Girl." Then there is "The Crystal Stopper," by Maurice Leblanc, which tells of the latest adventure of Arséne Lupin. "Virginia" is another of Ellen Glasgow's stories of the South. The Williamsons will also contribute another romance, "The Port of Adventure," this time using California for their setting. An event of importance during the summer will be the appearance of "Laddie," Gene Stratton-Porter's new tale of the Limberlost Swamp. Three other stories of interest are—"Bunker Bean," a satire on New York big business, by Harry Leon Wilson; "The Devil's Admiral," by Frederick F. Moore, a pirate yarn of the China Sea; and "Precious Waters," by A. M. Chisholm, a story of the irrigation plains of the West. Among the non-fiction books, "The New Freedom," by President-elect Woodrow Wilson, is attracting a great deal of attention because of the sane remedies for national needs there advocated. "Advertising as a Business Force," by Prof. Paul Terry Cherington, is the first attempt to set before the advertiser, on the one hand, the problems which confront him, and, on the other hand, the solutions of successful advertisers. In "The Stock Exchange from Within," William C. Van Antwerp, an active broker, states his views on the question of reforming the Stock Exchange. "The Spirit of American Literature," by John Macy, is a comprehensive critical work, covering the most important of our literary figures, past and present. Among art books, the two most prominent are "Composition," by Prof. Arthur Dow, which presents the synthetic methods of teaching art; and "The Conception of Art," by Henry R. Poore, a volume that defines "art" for the average layman. Two garden books of importance are also on the list—"The New Gardening," by Walter P. Wright, a work that brings the most recent developments in gardening within the scope of a single inexpensive volume, and a popular edition of "The American Flower Garden," by Neltje Blanchan.

Travellers: A number of changes have recently been made in the trade department. Daniel W. Nye will continue in charge of the sales department, with headquarters in Garden City. H. C. Kinsey has been transferred to take charge of the New York trade, as well as the cities of Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Baltimore and Washington. Harold B. Earle will continue to cover the same territory as last year—the coast and Middle West. Walter V. McKee has been transferred to the Southern territory. George V. Seiffert, formerly of Barse & Hopkins, will cover the smaller towns.

Duffield & Company include in their list of spring fiction a new novel by H. de Vere Stacpoole, author of "The Blue Lagoon," "The Ship of Coral," etc. It is called "The Street of the Flute Player," and Dr. Stacpoole's versatility is shown in the choice this time of ancient Athens for his background. Other salient items are "Veiled Women," a novel, by Marmaduke Pickthall, whose story, "Säid, the Fisherman," attracted considerable attention a year or two ago; "The Conspiracy," founded on the play of the same name by Robert Baker and John Emerson, now filling the Garrick Theatre, New York; "The Daughter of a Rebel," by a new Southern writer, Mrs. G. Vere Tyler. An American author, new in his own country, though well known in England, is W. B. Trites, represented by "Barbara Gwynne," published in England under the title of "Life," and "John Cave," two novels which have attracted the attention and praise of Mr. Howells. The fact that "Barbara Gwynne ("Life") has already sold upwards of twenty-five thousand copies in England, is the more extraordinary in view of its entirely American subject. Non-fiction includes "Success in Gardening," by Jessie P. Frothingham; "Success in Business," and Representing Dana Estes & Company.

JAMES F. WESTON, who represents Dana Estes & Company and the H. M. Caldwell Company, is affectionately known as "Jimmie" to a host of friends in the trade, not only over the South, middle West and eastern Canada which he has "covered" so long, but throughout the country. He is certainly by popular selection the "dean" of the booktrade travelers. He started in the business when it was considered a real profession, somewhere back in the early "seventies," later going with Estes & Lauriat about the time Philadelphia was projected into notice by reason of the Centennial Exhibition. He has been with Estes continuously for more than thirty-five years, representing them with great credit in various parts of the country.

"Waking Up Bolton," by William Ganson Rose, author of "The Ginger Cure"; "Westminster Abbey," by Helen Marshall Pratt. Duffield & Co. will also publish this spring, simultaneously with the issue in London and Paris, the collection of hitherto unpublished letters of the Emperor Napoleon I., collected from the archives in Paris by Lieutenant-Colonel Picard, of Dreyfus fame, who also furnishes a preface and notes.

Travellers: S. McL. Loweree (Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago and some cities in the Central West); Francis J. Sloane (Boston and New England); Laurens Maynard (Pacific coast and the Southwest).

E. P. DUTTON & Co. are best known among the trade as the agents for the famous Ernest Nister line of calendars, cards and illustrated books, as representatives of J. M. Dent & Sons., Ltd., in America, as publishers of Everyman's Library, Temple Shakespeare, Temple Classics and Temple Primers, etc., and as American representatives of George Routledge & Sons, Ltd. E. P. Dutton & Co. also publish standard miscellaneous works and many juvenile books. Their most important works include Pierre de Coulevain's "On the Branch"; her new book, "American Nobility," and Arnold Bennett's "Denry the Audacious," "Clayhanger," and "Hilda Lessways."

Travellers: Le Baron D. Scribner, Edgar W. Porter, Mortimer Douglas, H. W. Harris, W. C. Becker, D. W. Brintnall (New England territory); H. C. Foster and W. H. Foster (Middle West); Edward J. Chess (Pacific coast).

DANA ESTES & COMPANY'S new books include "Chatterbox for 1913," "Sunday for 1913," both fully illustrated with full-page and text illustrations and colored plates; "The Boy's Handicraft Book," title to be given later, a companion volume to "300 Things a Bright Girl Can Do"; "Miss Jimmy," by Mrs. Laura E. Richards, who tells of Miss Jimmy's return to her home town after a ten-years' absence; "The Fine Air of Morning," a new novel by Mr. Fletcher, author of "Town of Crooked Ways"; "The Night Dancer," by W. Trafford Taunton, author of "Romance of a State Secret," etc., unfolding the strange secret of the old tin mine; "Boys, Girls and Manners," by Florence Howe Hall, author of "The Correct Thing," "Social Customs," "Hand Book of Hospitality," a book intended to fill in the gap between the days of childhood and the grown-up period of existence when people are supposed to be able to decide for themselves what is proper, with chapters on "The Cardinal Points of Good Manners," "Dress and How to Wear It," "Manners at the Table," "Telephone Manners," etc.; "Practical Sewing and Dressmaking," information and advice for the amateur, and also full and complete information for persons desiring to establish themselves in the dressmaking business, with additional chapters on cost of materials, labor, etc.; "True Character Building," by Charlotte Simons, a volume of essays on love, liberty, courage, purity, humility, gratitude, etc.; "The Quaint Republics, Andora and San Marino," by Virginia W Johnson, author of "Many Years of a Florence Balcony," "Lily of the Arno," etc.; "Sand Dunes and Salt Marshes," by Dr. Charles Wendall Townsend, author of "Along the Labrador Coast," "A Labrador Spring," "Captain Cartwright and His Journal," etc., illustrated with nearly 100 remarkable photographs taken by the author; and "Easy Meals," by Caroline French Benton, author of "Easy Entertaining," "Fairs and Fêtes," etc., concerning menus, plans for breakfasts, luncheons, dinners, serving of the sick-room dishes, etc. Several additions to previous series have been made. To the well-known Beautiful England Series have been added the four following titles: "Hampton Court," by Walter Jerrold; "Hereford," by C. Edwardes; "The Dukeries," by R. Murray Gilchrist; "Exeter," by Sidney Heath; and "Dartmoor," by A. L. Salmond. The illustrations, as in the previous volumes, are by E. W. Haslehust. To the World's Romances have been added the following titles: "Sigurd and Gudrun," retold by W. E. Sparks, illustrated by Frank A. Pape; "Faust and Marguerite," retold by Ethel Wilmot-Buxton, illustrated by Norman White; "Paola and Francesca," retold by W. E. Sparks, illustrated by W. Matthews; and "Lancelot and Guenevere," retold by Gladys Davidson, illustrated by Innis Fripp. A beautiful edition of Tennyson's "Morte d'Arthur" is a noteworthy art book of the season. Each page illuminated in colors and gold in a missal style by Albert Sangorski, and the whole reproduced in facsimile upon ivory-surface paper. The decorations are reproduced in such a manner as to make the published volume almost indistinguishable from an original manuscript. The volume is uniform with "The Sermon on the Mount," published last year.

Travellers: A. D. MacMullen, Jno. J. Coakley, Jr.; James F. Weston, Adolph Davidson.

The H. K. Fly Company announce "Within the Law," by Marvin Dana, from the play of Bayard Veiller, one of the most successful plays ever presented on the American stage—illustrations, title page and jacket in color; "Socialism Summed Up," by Morris Hillquit, author of "Socialism in Theory and Practice," "History of Socialism in the United States," a concise, authoritative presentation of the socialistic movement brought right up to the minute; and "Our Theatres To-day and Yesterday," by Ruth Crosby Dimmick, a history of the theatres of Manhattan Island, with anecdotes and incidents in the lives of our great managers and actors of the last century, profusely illustrated.

Travellers: H. K. Fly, H. S. Drago.

Forbes & Company's forthcoming publications include: "Divorcing Lady Nicotine" (getting the upper-hand of the smoking habit), by Henry Beach Needham, in which a well-known journalist tells how he gave up tobacco; not a sermon or a tract, but a practical human-interest story, with the qualities that make widely popular Sam Blythe's "The Fun of Getting Thin" and "Cutting It Out"; "Women as World Builders," by Floyd Dell, a consideration, by the editor of the Chicago Evening Post Literary Review, of the feminist movement as represented by its leaders—Ellen Key, Olive Schreiner, Jane Addams and others; "The Man and Woman," by Arthur L. Salmon; studies in human life, discussing love, friendship and the attitude of the sexes toward each other; "A Table for Two" (good things to eat), by Ethel Lawrence, complete, with old and new recipes; "Making the Farm Pay," by C. C. Bowsfield, every phase of farming discussed by a practical farmer; two new volumes by the popular essayist, Dr. Frank Crane, and two new books on medical subjects by Dr. E. B. Lowry.

Traveller: Edwin S. Gray.

Funk & Wagnalls Company announce the great new Funk & Wagnalls Standard Dictionary, entirely revised and reset from cover to cover, as admittedly their most important publication for 1913. Useful and original features have been incorporated in the work, and more than 130,000 new terms included in the 450,000 term vocabulary. Perhaps the most attractive feature of this new dictionary is the bringing of all departments under one uniform alphabetical order. By this means those who consult the book need look in only one place for the word they seek, whatever that word may be. Following this work on the Funk & Wagnalls list of early 1913 books comes an important volume, entitled "The Walled City: A Story of the Criminal Insane," by Edward H. Williams, M.D. It deals with the social life of the insane, the amusements provided for them, care taken to free their minds from besetting hallucinations, precautions against their escape, and other intensely interesting features of their lives. Another book closely allied in subject matter to the preceding one is "The First Signs of Insanity," by Bernard Hollander, M.D., M.R.C.S. Dr. Hollander's reputation will secure careful attention for this work from both the layman and general practitioner. He deals in a scientific, yet popular, way, with the prevention of mental deficiency, and presents valuable suggestions for the treatment of the acute and chronic stages of this dread disease. Dr. Paul Dubois, M.D., the well-known author of the "Psychic Treatment of Nervous Disorders," contributes another careful and discriminating book, "The Psychological Origin of Mental Disorders." An important contribution to the literature of preventive medicine is "The Heart, Its Care and Cure, and the General Management of the Body," by Dr. I. H. Hirschfeld. The author's aim is mainly to reach the general public, and the work, though scientific, is popular in plan. George S. Payson, D.D., is represented on the Funk & Wagnalls list by "The Vital and Victorious Faith of Christ," a volume of distinct theological value. Rev. D. L. Leonard, D.D., has found it necessary to issue a third revised edition of his comprehensive and popular work, "A Hundred Years of Missions." In addition to these titles, the Funk & Wagnalls Company includes in its early 1913 list two recently published works—"The Apostles' Creed and the New Testament," by Johannes Kunze, and "The Mysteries of Life Series," by Isabelle Thompson Smart, D.D.

Travellers: Laurens Maynard (Far West and Pacific coast); David J. O'Connell (New England, Eastern and Middle Western States to Colorado).

Graham & Matlack announce extensive additions to their line of toy and juvenile books for the year 1913, including new shapes, sizes and titles never before featured in the forms as offered. All of the color work in the line is produced by lithography, no substitute process of color printing being offered. Reports from the trade indicate that the line of this firm as delivered in their initial year 1912

PHILIP GROSSET

Of Grosset & Dunlap.

PHILIP GROSSET, representing Grosset & Dunlap, is one of the many booktrade men of Canadian birth, having been born in Kingsey Falls, Quebec, in 1880. In March, 1902, he came to Grosset & Dunlap, and the following July went on the road for the firm. He now "covers" the States of Pennsylvania, New York, Ohio, Indiana, also Louisville, Ky.

met with immediate success, and they have been encouraged to make extensive additions to the line for the coming year.

THE GRIFFITH & ROWLAND PRESS (American Baptist Publication Society) announce the following books for spring publication: "True Wealth; or, What Is He Worth?" by J. Sherman Wallace, author of "What of the Church," a strong protest against the materialism of the day, which is so inclined to estimate a man's standing by the property he is able to accumulate; "Freedom and Authority in Religion," by Edgar Y. Mullins, president and Professor in Theology in Southern Baptist Theological Seminary; "The Bible Message for Modern Manhood," by Rev. Craig S. Thoms, Ph.D., an attempt to adjust Christian thought to what is termed the modern view of the Bible; and "Elements of Spirituality," a volume of sermons, by Rev. George H. Ferris, D.D., of the First Baptist Church of Philadelphia.

Travellers: American Baptist Publication Society is represented by their agents in Philadelphia, Boston, Chicago, St. Louis and Toronto; also by the Baker & Taylor Company and George W. Jacobs & Company.

GROSSET & DUNLAP, after a rather busy year, began 1913 with an unusually good list of titles. "The Prodigal Judge," by Vaughan Kester, conceded to be one of the most popular novels in the country, headed their list, and was displayed in an inviting jacket on all booksellers' counters January 20. February 1 brought current dramatic attractions. "Bought and Paid For," by Broadhurst and Hornblow (this promises to equal the enormous sale of "The Lion and the Mouse"). "Maggie Pepper," by Charles Klein, and "A Butterfly on the Wheel," by C. Ranger Gull. "Torchy," Sewell Ford's funniest office-boy story, lends the laugh to the list, and "His Sombre Rivals," by E. P. Roe, supplies the "home book" that meets a different demand. Later in February, David Graham Phillips's diverting story of a rich New York man's temperament—"The Grain of Dust"—appeared, and on the same date "Dawn O'Hara, the Girl Who Laughed," by Edna Ferber—a cheer-up story. Other February books were "The Vow," by Paul Trent, the story of a financial tyrant, who tried to retrieve his past for a woman's sake; "Rebellion," by Joseph Medill Patterson, a phase of the divorce problem; and David Belasco's "The Girl of the Golden West." Of course, there will be a new Rover Boys book this year—ready about May; also one volume will be added to the Tom Swift Series, and one each to the Outdoor Chums and Boys of Columbia High Series. The Rover Boys Series has had a big selling year, and for a lower-price line, Tom Swift Series has been in great demand. The Outdoor Chums and Boys of Columbia High, although younger series, are keeping up pretty closely in sales with the older lines. Christmas sales were so large in the Grosset & Dunlap lines that almost all the booksellers had to replenish stock early in January. The demand is still growing for Gene Stratton-Porter's "big sellers"—"Freckles" and "A Girl of the Limberlost." "The Garden of Allah" and "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine" are sold about as fast as press and bindery can turn them out. Grosset & Dunlap, this year, passed through the busiest January since the formation of the company.

C. S. Hammond & Co. have ready the 1913 editions of all of their atlases and maps, which editions contain extensive improvements and corrections to date. In their Comprehensive Atlas, bound in flexible leather, size (closed) 6⅞ x 9½ inches, they have a most complete and satisfactory atlas in convenient size; this is the first atlas of the kind issued in this country, and compares more than favorably with works of similar size issued by the leading European geographical houses. They also have ready a new edition of their Reversible Map of the United States and the World, 42 x 60 inches in size. This firm reports extensive business on parcel post map of the United States, and is just issuing a complete Parcel Post Guide, in which is named every post office in the United States, with its unit of area designated. This guide, with the accompanying map and tables, enables one to determine accurately the parcel post rates between any and all post offices in the United States.

Travellers: H. S. Stoll (Pacific coast and larger cities in the Middle West and East); George W. Wilson (Southern States, New England and the Middle West); H. E. Krauss (metropolitan district and smaller cities of New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania).

Harper & Brothers are publishing this season two novels by popular English authors—"The Judgment House," by Sir Gilbert Parker, a story of international interest, of London diplomacy and colonial heroism; and May Sinclair's "The Combined Maze," a drama of love, disillusion, hope and fate in a London suburb. To turn to the novels by well-known American authors, "New Leaf Mills," by William Dean Howells, depicts, as he knows so well how to do, the simple conditions of country life in the Middle West after the Mexican War; "Desert Gold," by Zane Grey, is a romance of the borders of Mexico and of the Arizona desert; "The Mystery of the Barranca," by Herman Whitaker, tells the struggles of two young American engineers to develop a mine in Mexico; "The Dragoman," by George K. Stiles, is a story of international diplomacy, adventure and the smothering of a Mohammedan uprising in Egypt which threatens all foreigners. Justus Miles Forman has written another story of New York society, in which the heroine has to meet and face some of the questions which confront the modern woman. "The Turning of Griggsby," by Irving Bacheller, is another humorous account of the regeneration of a town, something like his "Keeping Up With Lizzie"; "Isobel," by James Oliver Curwood, is a romance of adventures in Arctic wilderness. Three first novels by new writers are "Tackling Matrimony," by George Lee Burton, which tells of a young couple who married bravely without waiting for an income; "The Sojourner," by Robert Dull Elder, a story against a Western background of adventure, woman's pride and masculine tenderness that recall Bret Harte; and "The Wings of Pride," by Louise Kennedy Mabie, a story of the welding of the heroine's character by the change from luxurious ease in New York to self-sacrifice in a small town. Charles Rann Kennedy, author of "The Servant in the House," has written a one-act play, "The Necessary Evil," a study of the social evil; and Edward Sanford Martin indulges in his "Reflections of a Beginning Husband," in the genially humorous philosophizing well known to the readers of his editorial writings in Harper's Magazine and Life. There are two new editions of standard books—one of Woodrow Wilson's "George Washington," fully illustrated, at a popular price; the other, "The Mikado's Empire," by William Elliot Griffis, brought up to date with eight additional chapters. Other non-fiction books are "The Bend in the Road," by Truman A. DeWeese, a book to coax the city man into the country; and "Lyric Diction," by Dora Duty Jones, author of "The Technique of Speech," with a preface by Madame Melba; "Our Own Weather," by Edwin C. Martin, a book of facts, superstitions and theories regarding the weather intended for the lay reader; E. V. Shepard's "Scientific Auction Bridge"; "Safety," by W. H. Tolman, Director of the American Museum of Safety, and Leonard B. Kendall, containing the results of years of study on the methods for preventing occupational and other accidents and diseases; "Harper's Household Handbook," a guide to the easiest way of dealing with woman's work in kitchen, cellar and nursery; "The Work of the Rural School," by J. D. Eggleston and Robert W. Bruere, a stimulating book on the influence of the school in the upbuilding of the rural community; and "The Gibson Nature Reader," which contains selections from the writings and pictures of W. Hamilton Gibson, arranged by Prof. Maurice Bigelow for home and supplementary reading in the upper grammar grades. Other books for younger readers are "Harper's Book for Young Naturalists," by Alpheus Hyatt Verrill, a valuable guide for all boy collectors; and "Motor Boating for Boys," by Charles G. Davis, written primarily for boys, but useful to motor-boat owners of maturer years.

Travellers: George V. Price (all the large cities of the country as far West as St. Louis); H. V. Patterson (the Pacific coast, some of the Middle West and New England); Adam Burger (the South, Middle West and some cities in Pennsylvania and New York State).

The Hayes Lithographing Company, of Buffalo, N. Y., announce some important changes in their various series of lithographed booklets. AUGUST H. GEHRS

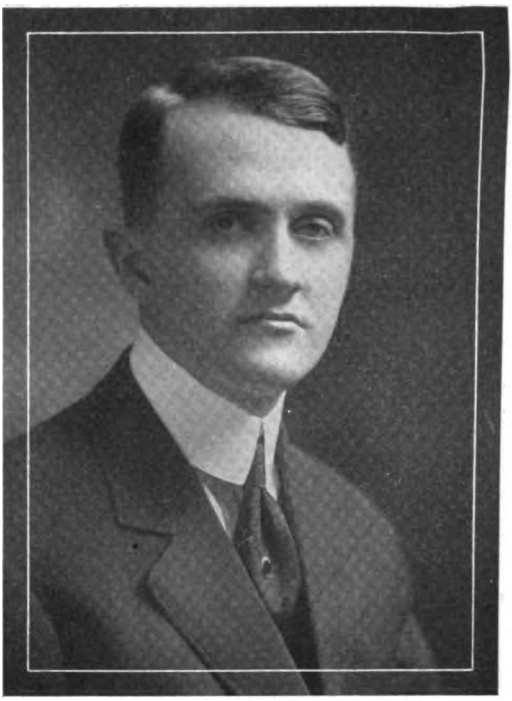
Representing Henry Holt & Co.

AUGUST H. GEHRS, who, along with Alfred Harcourt, represents Henry Holt & Company in the larger cities of the Middle West and East, began his business career in the buying department of A. C. McClurg & Co., some thirteen years ago. He worked his way up until reaching the position of assistant buyer, when "the lure of the East" became too strong, and he resigned to represent the publishing department of The Baker & Taylor Company in all the larger cities from New York to San Francisco. In January, 1912, Mr. Gehrs took his present position with Henry Holt & Company.

posed of a number of popular holiday and commencement titles. Another new series is the Friendship's Gift, titles suitable for presentation purposes as well as for different holiday seasons and family occasions. These books are bound in heavy embossed boards and satin, with fancy end leaves, and are tied with silk cords and tassels. The Best Wishes Series, of thirty-six titles, has now been subdivided into three series, as "Best Wishes A," "B" and "C," of twelve titles each. Christmas Wish Series, Presentation Series, the Gift of Cheer Series, and the Golden Hymn Series have proven so successful that they will be continued with but slight changes for this year. The Pearls, Brilliants and Garlands Series have been entirely changed for 1913. The decorations throughout are done in air brush. Another addition to the line are three ready-to-mail envelope series — Christmas Cheery Series, Christmas Sunshine Series and Christmas Greetings Series. Valentine season is well provided for in the six titles of the Valentine Series, and in the Love's Token and Presentation Valentine Series. The Hayes Lithographed Nursery A B C Series, the Christmas Stocking Series, Tell-Me-a-Story Series, Holly Wreath Series, Wonderland Series, Mother Goose Series, Golden Reader Series, Arbutus Series, Sweet Brier Series, Golden Rod Series, Violet and Forget-Me-Not and Pansy Series have proven their popularity. Barse & Hopkins, of New York, will continue to act as the sole selling representatives of the Hayes Lithographing Company.

Travellers: J. H. Hopkins, Charles B. Nourse, William Haldane, Jr., John V. I. Wood.

THE A. J. HOLMAN COMPANY have in preparation an India paper family Bible, large pica type and pronouncing text. The book is practically the same size as an India paper volume of the Encyclopedia Britannica, and, the publishers claim, is printed on the most opaque India paper ever made. The many people, especially old folks, who prefer to have the family Bible with the family record, but have refrained from getting one of the old-style books because of its excessive size and weight, will find this book a treasure. The Holman Sunday school teachers' Bibles for 1913 will show a marked improvement over all previous editions. The helps have been revised and will contain, in addition to the illustrated dictionary, concordance, four thousand questions and answers, etc., the treasury of Biblical information by the Rev. F. N. Peloubet, D.D., author of "Select Notes on the International Lessons," etc. All that the skill of long experience can devise has been applied to this particular feature of the Holman Helps to make them unsurpassed in value.



Travellers: A. J. Hilt, J. R. Houston.

HENRY HOLT & COMPANY'S preliminary spring announcements include a book that promises to excite wide interest—the concluding volume of Romain Rolland's great Jean Christophe Series, "Jean Christophe: Journey's End" (Love and Friendship—The Burning Bush—The New Dawn). This volume, containing Gilbert Cannan's translation of the three French volumes indicated in the subtitle, is probably the most dramatic in the life of the great composer. It is a coincidence that this spring, as well as last, this house announces but four works of fiction, all of them by authors who have won the favor of discriminating readers. The other three books in this group are "King John of Jingalo," at once a story of a lovable old king and a brilliant satire on English politics, by Laurence Housman, author of "Jump to Glory Jane"; John Mätter's "Three Farms" (in France, the Canadian Northwest and in Indiana), by the author of "Once"; Victor L. Whitechurch's "A Downland Corner," a volume of village episodes about the middle of the last century, by the author of "The Canon in Residence."

George Middleton's "Tradition, and Other One-act Plays of American Life," will prove a worthy companion volume to the author's "Embers"; Filson Young's "Opera Stories," telling the plots of ten non-Wagnerian master works, is similar in treatment to his "Wagner Stories" (already in its third American and sixth English editions). Henri Bergson (whose "Creative Evolution" is in its eighth printing) is the subject of Edouard Le Roy's "The New Philosophy: Henri Bergson" (March 8). Stanley Washburn's "Nogi: A Man Against the Background of a Great War," is by a daring war correspondent, who knew his subject well and supplies most of the illustrations of his brief book from photographs he himself took. Mr. Washburn's "Trails, Trappers and Tenderfeet in the New Empire of Northwestern Canada" is already in its second edition. A new book of similar title will be Ralph Stock's "Confessions of a Tenderfoot" (March), a true and unvarnished account of a globe-circling trip. W. L. Bevan's "The World's Leading Conquerors," illustrated with portraits, covers the period from Alexander to Napoleon. In Henri Lichtenberger's "Evolution of Modern Germany" (which follows closely upon the heels of Perris' "Germany and the German Emperor"), this brilliant Frenchman shows the transformation of Germany in the last century from a patriarchal feudal country into an individualistic capitalistic one. Germany also figures, along with France, Belgium and England, in Samuel P. Orth's "Socialism and Democracy in Europe." Another important historical work is the new and enlarged edition of Langlois' and Seignobos' "Introduction to the Study of History." An important and helpful new book will be Dr. E. Mather Sill's "The Child, Its Care, Diet and Common Ills," by a lecturer at the New York Polyclinic. It will be fully illustrated and written in very simple language. It is intended, among other things, to give aid before a physician can arrive and to indicate when one is needed. Three important new "nature" books are Ganong's "The Living Plant," with numerous illustrations, making the eighteenth volume of the American Nature Series; Pycraft's "The Infancy of Animals," by Dr. Pycraft, of the British Museum, with some 64 plates and numerous illustrations in the text; and Knight and Step's "Popular Botany," which treats of the living plant from seed to fruit, with some 360 illustrations, including nine colored plates. Fifty-six volumes of the Holt's Home University Library, that unique popular-priced series of new books by big authorities, have already appeared. The following eleven additional volumes may be expected early in March "Writing English Prose," by W. T. Brewster; "Napoleon," by H. A. L. Fisher; "Dr. Johnson and His Circle," by John Bailey; "The Origin and Nature of Life," by Benjamin M. Moore; "Comparative Religion," by J. Estlin Carpenter; "The Art of Painting," by Sir Frederick Wedmore; "The Newspaper," by G. Binney Dibblee; "From Jefferson to Lincoln," by William MacDonald; "The Victorian Age in Literature," by G. K. Chesterton; "German Literature," by J. G. Robertson; "The Literature of the Old Testament," by George Moore.

Travellers: Alfred Harcourt and August H. Gehrs (east of the Mississippi); Desmond FitzGerald (west of the Mississippi and on the Pacific coast).

WILLIAM DELOS LOVE

Representing Houghton Mifflin Co.

WILLIAM DELOS LOVE, one of the younger traveling men representing Houghton Mifflin Company, is a grand nephew of H. O. Houghton, the founder of the concern. He was graduated from Hamilton College in 1907, and has been connected with the business since that time. He now represents the firm in the South, a large part of the Middle West, New York State, Pennsylvania and Canada, and is very popular with all who have had the pleasure of meeting him.

HOUGHTON MIFFLIN COMPANY will publish, this spring, an interesting and varied list of books. The novels include Henry Sydnor Harrison's "V. V.'s Eyes," expected to equal "Queed" in popularity; three novels by Richard Pryce, author of "Christopher"; "Polly of Lady Gay Cottage," by Emma C. Dowd, which will be welcomed by all to whom "Polly of the Hospital Staff" endeared herself; and "W. A. G.'s Tale," by Margaret Turnbull, an appealing story for old and young. New novels by Charles McEvoy, Frances N. S. Allen, Mrs. Maynard Ladd and H. H. Knibbs are promised also. Among the miscellaneous books, "The Story of My Boyhood and Representing George W. Jacobs & Co.

D. L. MACRAE, who will celebrate his thirtieth birthday this spring, was born in the famous old town of Burlington, Vermont, where he spent his childhood and the early days of his youth. He graduated at the University of Vermont in 1904, and in the following year became assistant to W. K. Stewart, manager of the Bobbs-Merrill Company's Sales Department in Indianapolis. Remaining there for five years he learned deeply and well the profession of bookselling, and when the opportunity for "the road" came in 1909 from George W. Jacobs & Co. he accepted it with enthusiasm. He now covers the large towns East and West and once a year visits the Pacific Coast for his firm.

Youth," the autobiography of John Muir, is especially prominent. Other important works are "With the Victorious Bulgarians," of timely interest, by Lieutenant Wagner, the only authorized war correspondent on the Bulgarian lines; Dr. Woods Hutchinson's popular exposition of "Common Diseases"; "Auction of To-day," by Milton C. Work, the originator of the new count; Bradford Torrey's "Field Days in California"; "The Irish Plays and Playwrights," by Cornelius Weygandt; together with many other titles on subjects of interest.

Travellers: Frank Bruce (New York and Philadelphia); H. S. Elliott (Middle West and Pacific coast); W. D. Love (East, South and Canada); W. B. Pratt (Boston and New England).

B. W. HUEBSCH will publish a book by H. G. Wells, "The Discovery of the Future," in which the author discloses the vision, foresight and imagination which have made him so conspicuous a figure in contemporary English letters. The spring list inclumes Volumes I. and II. of the authorized complete edition of Gerhart Hauptmann's "Dramatic Works." This author has become one of the most prominent figures among living writers through having received the Nobel prize for literature in 1912. The ever-increasing interest in the printed drama makes it seem likely that this new enterprise will receive a hearty welcome at the hands of the public. "Human Quintessence," by Sigurd Ibsen, son of the famous dramatist, is a philosophical work of distinction on the same list. The agitation for better industrial and economic conditions is reflected in these works: John Spargo's "Syndicalism, Industrial Unionism and Socialism," an attempt to show the relation between these movements by a distinguished Socialist; "The New Unionism," by André Tridon, a sympathetic presentation of syndicalism in all lands, showing its theory and practice; and Allan L. Benson's "The Truth About Socialism," a straight-from-the-shoulder presentation of the movement which was supported by one million voters at the last Presidential election.

Travellers: Laurens Maynard, John C. Champion, Fred. W. Owen.

HURST & Co. are making many new lines of low-priced board juvenile books; their boys' and girls' copyrighted books have new titles added to each of the series now well established, and their popular copyrighted fiction also has new titles. They are also making several lines of books which should take with the trade on account of the low price and attractiveness of the offerings.

Travellers: L. M. Levy (large trade); George D. Hurst, H. W. Sampson; Platt & Peck represent them on the Pacific coast and the Middle West; McLeod & Allen are their Canadian representatives.

GEORGE W. JACOBS & COMPANY'S policy for 1913 can best be summed up in the words which appear at the head of their new announcement list—"Fewer and Better Books." In following out this policy, they have started out by publishing only two books this spring—"The Night Riders," considered Ridgwell Cullum's best story, and "How to Play Golf," by Harry Vardon, a fit companion to Braid's "Advanced Golf," which, although published five years ago, is selling better now than ever before. A little later they will publish what they consider one of the best books which it has ever been their privilege to produce, "Sis Within," by Harriet Malone Hobson, author of "Jinks' Inside." In "Sis Within," Miss Hobson takes the character of Sis in "Jinks' Inside," and develops it along the same lines as "Jinks." "Sis Within" is a complete story in itself. Thomas Martindale's experiences while on a hunting and tramping trip to the Yukon will appear in a new book, the title of which has not been decided upon.

"Robinson Crusoe," illustrated by Elenore Plaisted Abbott, is the new title in the Washington Square Classics, which already contains "A Wonder Book and Tanglewood Tales," "Black Beauty," "Treasure Island," and "Alice's Adventures in Wonderland." "The Polly Page Motor Club" will be added to the Polly Page Series. "Historic Adventures," dealing with the exploits of famous Americans, will be the new volume in the Historic Series. There will be added to the Brave Deeds Series, "Brave Deeds of Revolutionary Heroes." Mrs. Rorer has added to her list of cook books "Ice Cream, Water Ices and Frozen Puddings." In addition to the above, there are several books not yet ready to be announced which will help to make a strong list.

Travellers George W. Jacobs (Boston and Providence); D. L. Macrae (large towns East, West and Pacific coast); Theodore F. Pike (South, Middle West and Pennsylvania); Francis Wolle (New York State and New England).

MITCHELL KENNERLEY'S announcements for 1913 include: "The Eighteen-Nineties," a review of art and life at the close of the nineteenth century, by Holbrook Jackson; "The Golden Ass of Apuleius," translated by William Adlington, with an introduction by Thomas Seccombe; "Walter Pater," a critical study, by Edward Thomas; "With Walt Whitman in Camden," by Horace Traubel, the third volume; "The Enemy of Woman," a novel, by Winifred Graham; "The Thicket," a novel, by Alice Woods; "Wintering Hay," a novel, by John Trevena; "The Mother and the Child," by Norman Barnesby, M.D.; "The Americans," a drama, by Edwin Davies Schoonmaker; "Everywoman's Road," a morality of woman—creator, worker, master, joy-giver and keeper of the flame—by Josephine Hammond; "Jacob Leisler," a play of old New York, by William O. Bates; "Judas: a Play," by Harry Kemp; "Child of the Amazons," and other poems, by Max Eastman; "Daughter of Dawn," by Bliss Carman and Mary Perry King, with fifteen illustrations; "The Garden of Desire," love sonnets to a Spanish monk, by Edna Worthley Underwood; "Happy Days," by Oliver Herford and John Cecil Clay; "New Poems," by Dorothy Landers Beall; "New Poems," by Gerald Gould; "Hieroglyphics: A Note Upon Ecstasy in Literature," by Arthur Machen; "Unpath'd Waters," short stories, by Frank Harris; "Voices of To-morrow," by Edwin Björkman; "The Quiet Singer," poems, by Charles Hanson Towne; "How to Make a Catalogue of Rare Books," by Temple Scott; "The Eternal Maiden," a novel, by T. Everett Harré; "The Censor and the Theatres," by John Palmer; "The Note Books of Samuel Butler," edited by Henry Festing Jones; "Granite," a novel, by John Trevena; "Joseph Pulitzer," a character study, by Alleyne Ireland, F.R.G.S.; "Hagar Revelly," a novel, by Daniel Carson Goodman, author of "Unclothed"; "Poems," by Paul Mariett; "The Truth About the 'Titanic,'" by the late Colonel Archibald Gracie, with illustrations.

Travellers: F. J. Sloane (Eastern States); W. S. Siegel (Middle West); Laurens Maynard (Pacific Coast and Canada).

THE JOHN LANE COMPANY'S list for the spring and early summer months is large and attractive. Many valuable biographies will be published during the current season, notably that of "William Cobbett"—the history of his life in England and America, based mainly upon unpublished correspondence gathered from many sources. "James Fenimore Cooper" is an unusually fine piece of work, both in text and illustration, and gives delightful glimpses into the family life of a man who knew and loved America in its more romantic days. Miss Mary E. Phillips, the author, has secured for this work, through the kind permission of some members of the Cooper family, letters, portraits and pictures which have not heretofore been presented to the public. To those who take an interest in the life behind the footlights, Weeden Grossmith's "From Studio to Stage" will furnish many vivid pictures not only of his own life, but also of the lives of many of the celebrities of his day, Sir Henry Irving, among others. Miss Elizabeth R. Hunt, well known to Western audiences through her lectures on the drama, presents under the title, "The Play of To-day," a book of studies in play structure for the student and the theatre-goer. Among the novels, William J. Locke's "Stella Maris" is conspicuous. Dion Clayton Calthrop's "St. Quin" not only portrays the society life of to-day, but also takes the reader back to a bygone century and gives him a glimpse of romance in an early Georgian home. "The Distant Drum" should create a sensation in social circles, for it will be recognized as the "true story" of a very sensational episode that occurred in New York not long ago. A name new on the John Lane Company's list, though well known in England, is that of Ronald MacDonald, whose "Lanchester of Brazenoze" is an absorbing novel of the day. The art list for the coming season offers exceptional attractions. George Leland Hunter brings out a large paper edition of his "Tapestries, Their Origin, History and Renaissance," already a success in its earlier form. The new edition is on Normandy vellum, with uncut pages, bound simply in boards and Japanese vellum, and boxed. The special number of the International Studio is on "Modern Etchings, Mezzotints and Dry-Points." The Studio Year Book of Decorative Art, 1913, will contain a review of the latest developments in the artistic construction, decoration and furnishing of the house, and will have upwards of 400 reproductions.

J. B. Lippincott Company have just published two new novels, "Sally Castleton, Southerner," by Crittenden Marriott, a romance of Civil War days, and "The Parasite," by Helen R. Martin, a presentment of a problem vital to everyone. Other novels for early spring publication are "The Road of Living Men," by Will Levington Comfort; "The House of Thane," by Elizabeth Dejeans, a novel of American business and social life; "The Maxwell Mystery," by Carolyn Wells, a clever detective story, in which Fleming Stone, the great American detective, figures; "An Unforgiving Offender," by John Reed Scott, a love story, with a most extraordinary heroine; "Lo Michael!" by Grace L. H. Lutz, a sociological love story; and "A Pair of Little Patent Leather Boots," by Edith Stotesbury Hutchinson, a love story. "Gustave Courbet" will be a new volume in the French Artists of Our Day Series, which they are bringing out in this country, the former volumes being Edouard Manet and Puvis de Chavannes. Under the able editorship of Horace Howard Furness, Jr., the Variorum edition of Shakespeare will be continued with the publication of "Julius Cæsar." An important biography, Jerome A. Hart's "Sardou and the Sardou Plays," the first complete biography of Sardou in the English language, will be issued almost immediately. "Paul I. of Russia, Son of Catherine the Second," by K. Walizewski, was announced for publication last fall but held over for spring publication. Two profusely illustrated and practical books for nature lovers are "Handbook of Wild Flowers and Fruits," by G. L. Walton, M.D., and "Seeing Nature First," by Clarence M. Weed. "The Land of New Guinea Pygmies," by Captain C. G. Rawling, gives an account of the British expedition dispatched to Dutch New Guinea for the purpose of exploration. "Mines and Their Story," by J. Bernard Mannix, containing over 100 illustrations, is an entertaining account of the natural products of the earth, gold, silver, diamonds, coal and iron. "Practical Locomotive Operating," by C. Roberts and R. M. Smith, contains information which engineers and firemen must possess in order to pass required examinations, and to help them develop their ingenuity in solving locomotive problems. "Your Child To-day and To-morrow," by S. M. Gruenberg, tells parents how to deal with the perplexing problems of rightly developing children. "When to Send for the Doctor and What to Do Before He Comes," by Dr. F. E. Lippert and Dr. Arthur Holmes, is a practical and handy book for everyone. "Swine Husbandry in America," by Prof. E. G. Day, the first volume to appear in a new series of agricultural textbooks, will be followed by "Poultry Farming in America," by Harry A. Lewis; and a volume on the horse by Dr. Carl W. Gay. This series is under the able editorship of Prof. Kary C. Davis, of the New Jersey College of Agriculture (Rutgers). The firm's medical books include "Private Duty Nursing," by Katherine De Witt, R.N., and "Surgical and Gynecological Nursing," by Dr. E. M. Parker and Dr. S. D. Breckenridge. "Cooncan," by W. Dalton, is a handy volume on the new card game which is taking London by storm. A new edition of "The Epic of Sounds," an interpretation of Wagner's "Nibelungen Ring," by Freda Winworth, will no doubt prove as popular as the first edition of this valuable little book. Prof. K. C. Davis, of the New Jersey State College of Agriculture (Rutgers), has prepared another excellent text-book for school classes, entitled "Gardening for Schools, with Home Practice." "My Senior Year" is a college girl's record book, decorated in full color. Mrs. La Salle Corbell Pickett's "Pickett and His Men," an important historical work, will be ready early this year.

Little, Brown & Company ushered in the 1913 publishing season in January with Payne Erskine's "Joyful Heatherby," the love story of an innocent country girl and a young artist, and with Percy Brebner's "The Little Gray Shoe," a Zenda type of romance. Both have reached a fourth edition already. Next came the long-awaited new novel by A. S. M. Hutchinson, "The Happy Warrior," a story of the peerage, unquestionably one of the big books of the year. Seven printings have already been required of the book, now a best-seller. Mid-February novels include Louis Joseph Vance's rapid-fire story, "The Day of Days"; Anna Chapin Ray's transatlantic romance, "On Board the Beatic"; and Della Campbell MacLeod's out-of-the-ordinary love story, with a Southern setting, "The Maiden Manifest." On March 15 will be published E. Phillips Oppenheim's "The Mischief Maker," a tale of love and diplomatic intrigue; Etta Anthony Baker's "Miss Mystery," unwinding the curious life story of a pretty girl deprived of her memory; and "The Amateur Gentleman," by Jeffery Farnol, author of "The Broad Highway." This will be the firm's big book of the season; its 625 pages unfold the adventures of a sturdy young man who set out for London "to become a gentleman." On April 5 a "modest Dartmoor comedy," by Eden Phillpotts, "Widecombe Fair," planned some twenty years ago, will be published, together with "The Uphill Climb," a Western story by B. M. Bower, author of "Lonesome Land"; and "The Quarry," by John A. Moroso, described as something new in the way of a romance of the underworld. For May, Mary Imlay Taylor has written "The Long Way," and Kate Jordan has woven a romance of Greenwich Village, New York, in her novel, "The Creeping Tides." Little, Brown & Company's miscellaneous spring publications include "The Philippine Problem," by Frederick Chamberlin; "Engineers' Handbook on Patents," by William Macomber; "The Empire of India," by Sir J. B. Fuller (a new volume in the All Red British Empire Series); "Famous Speeches," second series, edited by Herbert Paul; "The Romance of the Men of Devon," by Francis Gribble; "A Sunny Life: The Biography of Samuel June Barrows," by Isabel C. Barrows; "The Prince Imperial," by Augustin Filon; two new volumes in the Continental Legal History Series, and a new book in The Modern Criminal Science Series. A fifteenth printing of Jeffery Farnol's novel, "The Broad Highway," and a fourth printing of Mary E. Waller's "A Cry in the Wilderness" are now announced.

Travellers: Joseph F. Greene (large Eastern cities); Andrew D. Pierce (Pacific coast, Northwest and New England); Frank Jones (South and Middle West).

LONGMANS, GREEN & Co. announce, among their several hundred books in preparation, a posthumous book by Cardinal Newman, formed of sermon notes. Those of an earlier date are especially interesting, as they introduce the reader to Newman in the first days of his Catholic life, settling down to the duties of an English priest and instructing a "mixed congregation" in the rudiments of Catholic doctrine. Another book by a famous convert to Catholicism is Monsignor Robert Hugh Benson's "Confessions of a Convert," which should be especially interesting to those who heard the author lecture in the United States last year. The second volume of Sir Rider Haggard's trilogy dealing with that famous hero of fiction, Allan Quatermain, is just published under the title, "Child of Storm." An important addition to the American Citizen Series, under the editorship of Albert Bushnell Hart, will be "Organized Democracy," by Frederick A. Cleveland. Dr. Cleveland, the former director of the Bureau of Municipal Research, in New York City, has of late been engaged as President Taft's adviser on reforming the methods of federal business administration. The second volume of the authoritative work on railroads, by Professor Ripley, of Harvard, "Financial Organization," will be ready shortly. Many school books, works in theology, medicine and general science will be issued in the next few months, including an important book on heating systems by Raynes, and an exhaustive treatise on "Practical Bacteriology," by Dr. Besson, the French bacteriologist.

Travellers: Edward J. Vass (East and Middle West); Laurens Maynard (Far West).

LOTHROP, LEE & SHEPARD COMPANY have their line well advanced. Their most important spring book will be "A Midsummer Wooing," by Mary E. Stone Bassett, author of "Judith's Garden" and "The Little Green Door." This novel will be published in decorative form, with colored illustrations by John Goss. The high-grade juveniles for which they are noted will have very important additions for both spring and fall publication. Edward Stratemeyer, E. T. Tomlinson, Dr. Rolt-Wheeler, D. Lange, Warren L. Eldred, Amanda M. Douglas, Nina Rhoades, Amy Brooks, and others being represented with their best work, while A. T. Dudley, in the front rank of writers of school athletic stories, reappears after a year's absence. They have from A. Neely Hall another of his popular mechanical books, "The Handy Boy," and another of the same nature, "The Boy Electrician," by the well-known A. P. Morgan. Their leading spring juvenile novelty will be a popular-priced edition of the Little Prudy Flyaway Series, by "Sophie May," very attractively bound.

Travellers: John E. Lander (New York City and East); L. W. Adams (Chicago and West); William G. Marple (South and Middle West).

MCBRIDE, NAST & Co. are beginning their second year of book publishing with a strong list of books, both along general lines and in the special fields occupied by their magazines. The following books are among those scheduled for publication this spring: "Thorney,"

HARRY T. HARPER

Representing David McKay.

HARRY T. HARPER, the popular representative of David McKay, on leaving school commenced with J. B. Lippincott Co. as mail boy, and was promoted successively to stock boy, order clerk, bill clerk, etc., during three years. He then resigned to enter a business school, and did not go back to his first love, the book business, until about twelve years ago, when he took a position with George W. Jacobs & Co. He traveled for them for about ten years, covering all sections of the United States, until two years ago, when he left to accept a position with David McKay.

a new novel by Alexander Black, whose reputation has been made by other successful works of fiction, with a colored frontispiece by Orson Lowell; "Gertrude," Edward Hungerford's latest novel, with a frontispiece in color by George Brehm; "The Children in the Shadow," by Ernest K. Coulter, with an introduction by Jacob A. Riis, a book tracing the development of the Children's Court, and pointing out remedies for delinquency among children. Among the travel books are "Through Our Unknown Southwest," by Agnes C. Laut; "Through Siberia, an Empire in the Making," by Richardson L. Wright and Bassett Digby; "Finding the Worthwhile in Europe," another "human-interest" guidebook, by Albert B. Osborne; two new titles among the Blue Books of Travel—"London; an Intimate Picture," by Henry James Forman; and "France, from Sea to Sea," by Arthur Stanley Riggs, F.R.G.S.; "Under the Sky in California," by Charles Francis Saunders and others. Among the house books are "The Dutch Colonial House," by Aymar Embury, II.; "Reclaiming the Old House," by Charles Edward Hooper; and "Modern Farm Buildings," by Alfred Hopkins. The new gardening books include "Flower Gardening," by H. S. Adams; "Old-fashioned Gardening," by Grace Tabor; "Practical Tree Repair," by Elbert Peets; "Lilies," by H. S. Adams; "A Book of Annuals," and "A Book of Perennials," by Henry H. Saylor. Miscellaneous books include "Theatrical and Musical Memoirs," by Rudolph Aronson; "Dyes and Dyeing," by Charles E. Pellew; "Practical Sailing and Motor Boating," by E. W. Kendrick; "Golf for the Late Beginner," by Henry Hughes; and "The Home Poultry Book," by E. I. Farrington.

Travellers: James A. McCann, A. W. Bermingham.

A. C. McClurg & Co.'s list of spring books contains several promising novels and many worthy books in other classes. The fiction comprises "The Woman of the Twilight," by Marah Ellis Ryan; an excellent yarn of the Cuban war, entitled "Holton of the Navy," by Lawrence Perry; a glowing romance of the East, "The Bear's Claws," by Grace Sartwell Mason and John Northern Hillard; and contributions by such favorite story tellers as Randall Parrish, C. E. Walk and Robert A. Bennet. Among books other than fiction will be found "The Different West," by A. E. Bostwick; "Kit Carson Days," by E. S. Sabin; "The Modern City," by F. L. McVey; "Irrigation Farming," by W. H. Olin; "Mark Twain and the Happy Island," by Elizabeth Wallace; "The Indian Blanket Book," by George W. James, together with several books to be issued in what is called "novelty style," and new editions of some of the standard works upon the firm's regular catalogue.

Travellers: For the publishing department, E. T. Sargent (Middle West); S. L. Willard (Pacific coast).

David McKay will have five new volumes of the Bob Steele Series, new volume Frank Merriwell Series, two new volumes in the Girls' Own Library, new volume in the Boys of Liberty Series, "Sepherial's Astrology" in the Popular Hand Book Series, new book on "Candy and Bon Bons, and How to Make Them," by Marion Harris Neil; new volume in the Garden Series; first volume of a new series on birds, entitled "Little Rob Robin," and a number of other new juveniles, which will be announced later.

Travellers: Harry T. Harper, David McKay, Alexander McKay.

Travellers: W. J. Kelly (Canada, Pacific coast and South); Clarence Condit (east and part of Middle West); William Kleinteich (Middle and Northwest); Charles E. Miller (Chicago and other large cities).

The Macmillan Company

Travellers: A. Sage Swanson, sales manager (Boston, Philadelphia and Chicago); William P. Albrecht (Middle West and Eastern territory); Thomas Cuthbertson (New York City); Desmond FitzGerald (extreme South and Pacific coast).

Moffat, Yard & Company's early spring fiction includes "Guinea Gold," by Beatrice Grimshaw, a story of love and adventure in New Guinea; "My Lady Peggy Leaves Town," a sequel by Frances Aymar Mathews to "Lady Peggy Goes to Town"; "Bachelor's Buttons: the Candid Confessions of a Shy Bachelor," by Edward Burke; "Barbara," a story of Ireland, by Alice and Claude Askew; "Memoirs of Mimosa," in which Mimosa tells of her doings with charming frankness, by Maude Elliot; and "Wild Grapes," in which Marie Louise Van Saanen tells of what happened to Davy in England, Australia and America.

Travellers: See John Lane Company.

John Murphy Company, of Baltimore, have just issued another edition of the Douay Catholic Bible, 16mo, size 4 x 6 inches, containing the Old and New Testament, 1536 pages, printed on India paper, an unusually compact and handy, as well as legible, edition of the Bible. The Murphy octavo Bible, in large type, is well known to buyers throughout the country, and with this latest book, together with the new pocket edition recently issued, the Catholic Bible wants can be supplied. The Murphy Manual of Prayers, the complete Catholic Prayer Book, endorsed by three Cardinals and all of the Church authorities, is still in great demand.

Travellers: George L. Fitzgerald, Frank Haas (local).

Thomas Nelson & Sons announce the publication of a large pica-type edition of the American Standard Bible, which will supply the want for a Bible in convenient size with very large type, suitable for persons whose eyesight is defective, and also makes a good Bible for pulpit, prayer meeting or Sunday School desk. They also call attention to the small vest-pocket Testament in the American standard version, containing all Scripture names marked for pronunciation, and the words of Christ emphasized by being printed in bold-face type. This Testament is printed on Nelson's India paper, making it extremely thin, so that it can be carried in the vest pocket, and it is printed from clear, easy-reading type. Nelson's prayer books and hymnals are well and favorably known, and they have added some very attractive styles to their line this year. In the New Century Library of Standard Authors, on India paper, in smooth limp leather binding, they have recently issued a six-volume set of Stevenson, containing the best of Stevenson's works, making a very popular addition to this line. They also publish Stevenson in their editions de luxe of standard authors, and announce for this year the publication of their pigskin editions de luxe on India paper, including Dickens, Thackeray, Shakespeare, Stevenson, etc., these being bound in the most durable material that can be obtained, and making dainty and artistic sets. These editions de luxe are sold strictly on a net basis. Nelson's general line of Bibles, Testaments, prayer book and hymnals embraces over 600 styles, in addition to which they publish devotional and birthday books, pocket-size dictionaries and miscellaneous publications.

Travellers: H. B. Smith (East and Pacific coast); J. J. Hamilton (South and New England); George F. Bachmann (Middle West); A. C. Keowen (local); Thomas MacLaren (Middle West).

J. S. Ogilvie Publishing Co., New York, have recently added six new titles to their Railroad Series of popular fiction, and ten new titles to their Sunset Series of paper-covered novels, making the total number listed in the latter 351. They sold over 120,000 copies of "Sulzer's Short Speeches" when William Sulzer was conducting his campaign for the governorship of New York State. On the recently issued "Parcel Post Handbook" they anticipate a large sale. The firm has gone to a certain extent into the popular cloth copyright line, adding several new titles, among them some books translated from the Russian, including four by Tolstoi, one by Gorky, and one by Leonid Andreyev.

Traveller: William Badenhop, with the firm for the last four and one-half years, is still the representative, covering the Southwest, the Pacific slope, Canada and Australia.

The Outing Publishing Company's leading book is by a young Canadian writer, Samuel A. White. It is published this month under the title, "Empery," and hinges upon the long struggle between the Hudson's Bay Company and the Northwest Fur Company in the middle of the last century. Another new name on the Outing list is Hamilton M. Laing. His "Out Among the Birds" is a chronicle of personal experiences and observations of the teeming bird life of western Manitoba, and is illustrated with unusually good photographs. "Across the Andes," by Charles Johnson Post, postponed from last fall, is a personal narrative of interesting experiences in mountain passes and along the swift rivers of the Bolivian interior. Incidentally, it gives glimpses of life in the rubber plantations near the Putomayo districts. New titles to be added to the Outing Handbook Series this year are: "The Suburban Garden," by Grace Tabor; "The Gasoline Motor," by Harold Whiting Slauson; "Iceboating"; "The Strategy of Tennis," by Raymond D. Little; "Advanced Golf," by Harold H. Hilton; "Intensive Farming," by L. C. Corbett; "Fishing With the Dry Fly," by Samuel G. Camp; "Practical Dogkeeping," by Williams Haynes. A new golf book is also on the Outing list—"The Art of Golf"—by Joshua Taylor, a well-known English professional. It contains a chapter by J. H. Taylor, still better known, particularly on this side, as probably one of the three or four best professionals in Great Britain. "Yacht

H. V. CLULOW

Representing the Oxford University Press.

H. V. Clulow was born in London, and his connection with the book business dates back to 1892, when, as a boy, he secured his first position with the London house of the Oxford University Press. The opening of the American Branch in 1896 offered a chance for advancement, and he came to this country, applied for and obtained a position in it, and has been there ever since. He has been on the road for fourteen years, his territory being the middle West. When not on the road Mr. Clulow devotes his attention to the Educational Department of the business.

Cruising," by Claud Worth, is designed for the aid of those who wish to know more about sailing than is involved in an afternoon's lazy drift on home waters.

Travellers: C. C. Kendrick (East); Laurens Maynard (Pacific coast).

THE OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS announces that the novels of Sir Walter Scott can now be procured in a style uniform with the Oxford Dickens and the Oxford Thackeray. The edition, printed on the famous Oxford India paper, is a credit to the bookmaker's art. A companion volume to "The Oxford Book of English Verse" has just been issued, entitled "The Oxford Book of Victorian Verse," edited by Sir Arthur Quiller-Couch. The Oxford "Teacher's Bible," the Scofield "Reference Bible" and the 1911 Bible continue in popularity. Styles range in size from the "mite" Bible to the royal quarto pulpit Bible, and prices to suit every purse. The Oxford "Teacher's Bible" still holds its own. It is known "from Greenland's icy mountains to India's coral strand."

Travellers: W. W. McIntosh; C. C. Schepmoes; D. I. MacFadyen; H. V. Clulow; Charles Korbel; Frederick Bayer; William H. Allen; O. J. Hammen.

L. C. PAGE & COMPANY'S 1913 list will include, as heretofore, in copyright titles and lines exclusively, some fifty titles. A number of the most important will be published during the spring. Perhaps the leader of the early books will be a new novel by Eleanor H. Porter, author of the popular "Miss Billy books," "Enter 'Pollyanna.'" L. M. Montgomery, author of the famous "Anne of Green Gables," etc., plans her new book in time for publication in the early summer or fall. This will be a sequel to "The Story Girl." Other important novels are a sequel to "The Island of Beautiful Things," by Will Allen Dromgoole, the Southern writer and poet; "The Career of Dr. Weaver," a novel, by Mrs. Henry W. Backus, its theme the responsibilities and problems in the medical profession of the present day; "The Harbor Master," an adventure romance, with a Newfoundland setting, by Theodore Goodridge Roberts; "The Hill of Venus," a romance of the thirteenth century, by Nathan Gallizier. Helen M. Winslow will contribute a sequel to her "Peggy at Spinster Farm" under the title, "At the Sign of the Town Pump." A book on aviation, by Harry N. Atwood, perhaps America's foremost aviator, and the "What Shall I do Girl," by Isabel Woodman Waitt, which will appeal directly to the young girl who must adopt for herself a salary-earning career, are promised. Two new volumes will be added to the popular Spell Series—"The Spell of Switzerland," by Nathan Haskell Dole, and either "The Spell of Scotland" or "The Spell of the Rhine." Henry C. Shelley's new books will be "Royal Castles of England" and "The Art of the Wallace Collection." In the fields of art, literature and travel, will be published "Florida: Queen of the Tropics," by Mrs. Neal Wyatt Chapline; "The Russian Empire of To-day and Yesterday," by Nevin O. Winter, and "Poland of To-day and Yesterday," by the same author, who will be remembered particularly for his South American books; Prof. Will S. Monroe's work on "Hellas and the Isles of Greece"; and a new volume in the Art Galleries of Europe Series on "The Art of the Heritage" (St. Petersburg), by James Schmidt, director of the art gallery. Each of the standard series of juveniles issued by this house will have a new volume added, and an interesting series, devoted to Our Little Cousins of Long Ago, companion series to the established Little Cousin Series, will be inaugurated with the publication of "Our Little Roman Cousin of Long Ago," being the "Story of Marcus, A Boy of Rome," by Julia Darrow Cowles. A book of particular interest for girl readers will be "The Sunbridge Girls of Six Star Ranch," by a writer of established reputation, writing under a pseudonym.

Travellers: F. T. J. Nunan (principal cities West, including Pacific coast); Harry W. Sully (principal cities East, including Canada); John J. Mullin (the South, Middle West, New England and lower Canadian provinces).

THE PENN PUBLISHING COMPANY announce, for 1913, the following important changes in prices on their various juvenile publications: All books formerly published at $1.25 regular will be $1 net; those published at $1 regular will be 80 cents net; publications formerly at 60 cents regular will be 50 cents net, and all books previously $1.20 net will be changed to $1.25 net. There will also be added a series of books for boys and girls at 25 cents net. These prices will be net permanently. As this change is made in the interest of the trade, and in some cases means a lower wholesale price than formerly, it is hoped that all branches of the trade will not only support the movement, but will lend their aid in maintaining the prices and thus securing the added profit for themselves. The Penn Publishing Company suggests, also, that any books of theirs now in stock be re-marked at the new prices. The usual number of new stories for boys and girls will be offered with some new features in juvenile publications. In addition to the various books for boys and girls, they will publish a limited number of books for adult fiction, chief of which will be a new story by Edward Bateman Morris, author of "Blue Anchor Inn," which had a gratifying sale in 1912. New stories for adults by Elizabeth Lincoln Gould, author of "Grandma," and Lucy Foster Madison, the historical writer, will probably appear. Among the books this year will be noticed a series of short stories in the simplest language, to be called the Baby Animal Series, by Captain C. E. Kilbourne, U. S. A. These books will be published at 50 cents net, and will describe entertainingly and humorously the experiences of various young animals, both wild and tame. The three titles announced for 1913 are: "Baby Elephant and the Zoo Man," "Baby Monkey and the Woolly Wolves,"

"Baby Lion and the Bumphead Animal," all illustrated both in color and line. John T. McIntyre, author of various novels and juveniles, will contribute a new series at 75 cents net, The Frontier Scout Series. These books will deal in a chatty, story-telling style with the experiences of various pioneers in the country's history, starting with Daniel Boone and Kit Carson. Margaret Warde, author of the Betty Wales Books, contributes the second "Nancy Lee" story, "Nancy Lee Spring Term," a school story for girls. Grace M. Remick, who has so well entertained her girl readers with the Glenloch Girls Series for the past three or four years, offers a new story of a boy and girl companionship, entitled "Jane Stuart, Twin." "Faith Palmer at Fordyce Hall" is the second volume of the Faith Palmer Series, by Lazelle T. Woolley; and Beth Bradford Gilchrist will present "Helen and the Uninvited Guest" as the second of the fanciful stories about Helen Thayer. Alice Louise Lee's "A Senior Co-Ed" is the fourth and probably the concluding volume in the series of stories dealing with co-educational life at Syracuse University. Among the new boys' books will be noted the second volume of Captain C. E. Kilbourne's Army Series, entitled "An Army in the Philippines." Commander Edward L. Beach's two navy stories are supplemented by "Roger Paulding, Gunner," in which volume his hero rises another grade in the service of his country. "The Boy Scouts of Swift River," by Thornton W. Burgess, continues the experiences of the young heroes. "The Boy Scouts of Woodcraft Camp" and "The Young Farmer," by George B. Hill, is the first of a series dealing with agricultural life for boys. There will be a number of new books for the younger children also, notable among these being continuations of previous stories by Alice Turner Curtis and Elizabeth Lincoln Gould. Mrs. Curtis supplements the Marjorie Books with "Marjorie and Miss Meachin," and the readers of the Little Runaway Series will be delighted with another title, "The Little Runaways, Travellers." Polly Prentiss will again meet her friends in "Polly Prentiss' Vacation." Elizabeth I. Samuel will contribute a title to the Industrial Series in the "Story of Iron and Steel." Among the new Vacation Series, the line of juveniles at 50 cents net, which has attained a high degree of popularity, are the "Rambler Club's Ball Nine," "The Rambler Club's Motor Boat," by W. Crispin Sheppard, and "Letty's Greatest Treasure," by Helen Sherman Griffith. New titles in the Popular Handbook Series will be "English Literature," by R. V. Gilbert, and "Business Hints for Women," by C. E. Darrow.

Travellers: Charles C. Shoemaker (New York and Boston); Frank W. Shoemaker (other large cities and Pacific coast); Frederick Krauss (South and Middle West); Edward W. Mumford (New York State and New England).

Isaac Pitman & Sons, 2 West 45th Street, New York, have recently issued the following works: In Pitman's Common Commodities of Commerce, "Wool, From the Raw Material to the Finished Product," by J. A. Hunter; "Iron and Steel, Their Production and Manufacture," by Christopher Hood; "Tobacco, From Grower to Smoker," by A. E. Tanner; "Oil: Animal, Vegetable, Essential and Mineral," by C. Ainsworth Mitchell; "Sugar: Cane and Beet," by George Martineau; "Rubber, Production and Utilization of the Raw Product," by H. P. Stevens; "Silk, Its Production and Manufacture," by Luther Hooper; "Coal, Its Origin, Method of Working and Preparation for the Market," by Francis H. Wilson; "Cotton, From the Raw Material to the Finished Product," by R. J. Peake; "Tea, From Grower to Consumer," by A. Ibbetson; "Coffee, From Grower to Consumer," by B. B. Keable. Among general works, the following titles: "Handbook of Advertising," by C. Jones; "Auditing, Accounting and Banking," by Frank Dowler and E. Mardinor Harris; "Gold Mine Accounts and Costing," by G. W. Tait; "Pitman's Guide for the Company Secretary," by Arthur Coles; "Theory and Practice of Commerce," by F. Heelis; "Systematic Indexing," by J. Kaiser; "The History, Law and Practice of the Stock Exchange," by A. P. Poley and F. H. Carruthers Gould; "Stockbroker's Office Organization, Management and Accounts," by Julius E. Day; "Style Book of Business English" (fifth edition), by H. W. Hammond; "How to Become a Law Stenographer" (second edition), by William L. Mason; Pitman's "Shorthand Writers' Phrase Books and Guides"; "Electrical and Engineering," "Estate Agents," "Printers and Publishers," "Railroad," "Shipping," "Architects, Auctioneers and Surveyors"; "Shorthand Birthday Book of Dickens' Quotations," "French Shorthand Commercial Correspondence," Pitman's "Shorthand Speed Tests and Guide to Rapid Writing in Shorthand," by Garwood, Godfrey and Smart; "Rules of Isaac Pitman Shorthand in a Nutshell," "Supplementary Exercises on 'Course in Isaac Pitman Shorthand,'" Part 1, by W. L. Mason; "Practical Course in Touch Typewriting" (eleventh edition), by Charles E. Smith; "Course in Isaac Pitman Shorthand," new and revised edition.

Travellers: P. C. Leadbeater (general representative); A. C. McClurg & Company and Robert S. Leete & Company, Chicago (Middle West); Cunningham, Curtiss & Welch, San Francisco and Los Angeles, Cal. (Pacific coast); M. D. Fulton, Springfield, Mass.

Platt & Peck Co. have a greatly enlarged line this year. One of their chief offerings is a series of painting books to retail at from 15 cents to $1.25. The color work in these books is unusually fine and the covers bright and attractive. They are also bringing out a new edition of "Æsop's Fables," containing sixteen colored plates; a new edition of "Mother Goose Jingles," containing eight colored plates; and a new edition of "Black Beauty." One attractive series is known as the Little Tots Picture Story Books, each book containing thirty-two half-tone plates

W. P. BLESSING

Representing the Presbyterian Board of Publication.

W. P. BLESSING confesses that his first year in the book business was in Dayton, Ohio, in 1893. He began as duster swinger, was a junior clerk, etc., until promotions were in order, and in time he became "head man" at the United Brethren Publishing House. In 1900 he shifted to Chicago to accept the position of assistant to H. S. Elliott, manager of the Presbyterian Board's branch. Three years later on the resignation of Mr. Elliott he was made manager, and for the past ten years has been a promoter of steady business increases for his house. He is a very enthusiastic worker, and has a host of loyal friends both in and outside the church's circles.

printed in four colors, to be retailed at a popular price. Another series is the Story Hour Books, containing 128 pages, sixteen colored plates and ten black and white pictures. "Five Little Starrs," by Lilian Elizabeth Roy, is the first book of a series for young readers. Three of these will be ready this year. Among the other children's books on their list are "Princess Polly by the Sea," the fourth volume of the Princess Polly Series, by Amy Brooks; "Bees Shown to the Children," by Ellison Hawks, the new volume in the Shown to the Children Series; "Old Glory, the Story of Our Country's Flag," by George Alexander Ross; "A Mother's Treasury of Children's Stories," a 384-page book containing 48 colored illustrations; "Fireside Fairies," by Juniata Salsbury; "Good Night Stories," by Mrs. Frank Sittig; and "The Adventures of a Cottontail Rabbit," by Burton Stoner. For spring publication they announce "Line Lost Limericks," by Fred E. Woodward; a graduation edition of "Youth and Opportunity," by Thomas Tapper; "The Home Rule of Eliza," a humorous novel by Frederick W. Becker; "What You Should Tell Your Boy," by Edmund Thomas; "First Aid to Naturers," by J. W. Muller, a book containing a laugh on each page: "Letters from a Father to His Daughter Entering College" and "The American College," both by Charles Franklin Thwing, president of Western Reserve University; and "How to Build a Fortune," by Thomas Tapper. They expect to have ready in time for use as graduation presents a series of gift books, printed in two colors, with photogravure covers colored by hand. They also announce for later in the year a one-volume edition of "Shakespeare," containing a photogravure frontispiece and sixty-four illustrations, and a series of books edited by Thomas Tapper, known as The Inspiration Books. The titles and authors will be announced later. They will also represent Hurst & Co. west of Chicago and in all of the middle West territory except the large cities.

Travellers: George Edmund Platt (Pacific coast and large cities); Donald W. Newton (Canada and the large cities of the middle West); H. W. Sampson (Southwest); E. R. Herrick (the Southeast and middle West).

JAMES POTT & Co. offer this year an exceptionally strong line of Bibles, Testaments, prayer books, hymnals, etc., containing many new styles and features, all bound in their patent non-breakable, open-flat binding; also a large number of new books of travel and biography, etc., will be issued later in the season.

Travellers: Their regular staff of travellers will call on the trade, as usual, this year.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS report that among their novels for the spring appear the following books: "The Knave of Diamonds," by E. M. Dell, author of "Way of an Eagle," a book of which over 10,000 copies have been sold; "The Hero of Herat," by Maud Diver, author of "Captain Desmond, V. C."; "Patchwork Comedy," by Humfrey Jordan, author of "The Joyous Wayfarer"; "Port of Dreams," by Miriam Alexander, author of "Beyond the Law"; "The Burning Question," by Grace Denio Litchfield, author of "Nun of Kent"; "Who Laughs Last," by Ashton Hilliers, author of "As It Happened"; "Ashes and Sparks," a clever satire on the equal suffrage question, by Percy White; "The Adventures of Miss Gregory," by Percival Gibbon; and a charming little story by Mrs. T. P. O'Connor, entitled "Little Thank You."

Travellers: Sidney H. Putnam (New York, Boston, Philadelphia and Chicago); H. L. Allison (Pacific coast, New England and the larger towns of the East and Middle West); Walter McGall (South and smaller towns of the East and Middle West).

RAND, MCNALLY & COMPANY intend to eliminate competitive lines in their novelties and leaders, and individualize their present and future publications for the trade. They are now forming a campaign towards the accomplishment of a publishing career that will merit the attention of the bookseller.

Travellers: Belford & McNally (Alaska, Mexico and West); W. M. Allen (Middle West); L. G. Bailey (New England and Eastern coast); P. A. Coates (West, South and Canada); J. A. Bell (Chicago).

The Reilly & Britton Co. are angling for the best-selling novel with a $10,000 bait. No less than that they offer for the best manuscript submitted to them by August 31, 1913. The competition is open to everyone; each manuscript stands on its own merit. The judges will be well-known literary men. The co-operation of the trade in this effort to secure a big story will be appreciated.

Travellers: S. H. Darst (Central and Western territory); W. F. Lee (the East, Canada and the Pacific coast territory); S. D. Siler (the Southern territory).

Fleming H. Revell Company's announcements for this spring include the publications of many of their popular religious writers, who have long been identified with their list: David James Burrell, D.D.; G. Campbell Morgan, D.D.; John A. Hutton, D.D.; James S. Dennis, D.D.; T. T. Martin, Percy C. Ainsworth, John Douglas Adam, D.D.; Basil Mathews, Archibald McLean, Charles Stelzle, W. H. Griffith-Thomas, D.D.; W. L. Watkinson, D.D., and others, with a sprinkling of many new favorites, such as B. H. Carroll, D.D.; Giovanni Luzzi, James A. Anderson, Weston Bruner, John F. Sterling, Henry W. Stough, Prof. J. R. Howerton, P. Marion Simms. In their International Leaders' Library will be found a splendid edition of "David Livingstone's Life," by W. Garden Blaikie, and also popular writings by Hannah Whitall Smith, Andrew Jukes, John H. Kerr, Andrew Murray and Robert Laird Stewart. A new life of Frances Willard, a Camp Fire Girl's story by I. T. Thurston, author of "Scout Master of Troop 5"; a new volume by John T. Faris, Dillon Wallace, Richard S. Holmes. A new volume in the Edward Bok Books of Self-Knowledge, and a Turkish story by Henry Otis Dwight, entitled "A Muslim Sir Galahad." Among the tentative announcements for fall are found new works by Prof. Edward A. Steiner, Prof. Hugh Black, Robert E. Knowles, Caroline A. Stanley and Clara E. Laughlin.

Travellers: Charles M. Roe, Fleming H. Revell, Jr.; William H. Mook, Jr.; and Alvin H. Raettig.

The Saalfield Publishing Company offer many attractive new things for 1913, and first, of course, come additions to their already widely known muslin books. Two series swell the line, four titles in each, giving in all twenty series—surely an assortment large enough to please any and all buyers. Special mention is merited by the linen books, with their bright-colored pictures and rollicking rhymes. They are lithographed in bright colors on a line of exceptional quality, and there are five series of varying sizes, with four titles in each. Then there is a group of three series of toy books, in fine color printing, with picture covers, many colored illustrations and charming rhymes; in short, everything that goes to make up an up-to-date toy book. Of course, there's a new volume in the Billy Whiskers Series, from the facile pen of Mrs. Montgomery, and also a volume entitled "Mythology in Rhymes and Jingles," by Prof. A. C. Flick, of Syracuse University. Prof. Flick has put the most interesting myths into simple rhymes, and Hibbard V. B. Kline has seconded his efforts by giving to the volume scores of full-page illustrations, many of which are reproduced in colors; and he has further embellished the book with headpieces and decorative touches. Mrs. Ruth Alberta Brown continues the story of Tabitha in the third volume of the Ivy Hall Series—"Tabitha's Vacation"—and all Tabitha's many reader friends will follow her career and that of her adopted sister with interest. From the same author's pen comes a story of six orphaned girls, the oldest just turned eighteen, struggling to keep the brood together under the roof of the little brown house; they have gay days and sad ones intermingled, as might be imagined when you consider the family. "At the Little Brown House" is a story it will do any girl good to read. The boys have not been forgotten, and "The Auto Boys' Big Six" will soon be ready for them, Mr. Braden's speeding-up story of real, red-blooded boys. For older people, there is prepared the Buckeye Series, twelve gift books suitable for friend to send to friend on the many occasions during the year when some particular message is called for. These books are printed in two colors, and bound in leather and also in suede, with cover stamping in gold.

Travellers: Albert G. Saalfield (Pacific coast); B. Spero (Canada, the South and New York City); A. H. Monk (Middle West and New England); A. J. Kelley (Kansas and Missouri); T. J. Harris (Central States); T. C. Johnson (Texas).

Charles Scribner's Sons have an unusually strong fiction line this spring. It includes works by John Fox, Gouverneur Morris, Stephen French Whitman, Frances Nimmo Greene, Thomas Nelson Page, Maurice Hewlett and E. W. Hornung. John Fox, in "The Heart of the Hills," deals with mountain people thrown into contact and conflict with the people of the blue-grass lowlands. "The Penalty," Gouverneur Morris' novel, has its scene in New York, or, rather, in the two New Yorks—that bright city grouped about Central Park, and that other murky city shadowed by the piers of the East River bridges. Stephen French Whitman, author of "Predestined," has now written a love story, "The Isle of Life," whose scene is a little island off Sicily, and whose principals are Americans. Mrs. Greene's novel, "The Right of the Strongest," deals with a masterful young American business man, with the genuine "vision" for money-making, whose intense

NATHANIEL L. TENNEY

Representing Small, Maynard & Co.

NATHANIEL L. TENNEY, of Small, Maynard & Company Inc., is sales manager and a director in the corporation. He sells the publications of the firm in all the large cities east of Chicago and St. Louis. He is a graduate of Harvard College of the class of 1903, and played right half-back on the varsity football team until an injury ended his playing days. As one of the numerous college men who have seriously adopted the business end of book publishing, he has represented his firm with distinction and success during the past six years.

ambition is brought into conflict with his love; the scene is a mountainous district of Alabama. Mr. Page's "The Land of the Spirit," deals largely with episodes of the South. Maurice Hewlett, in "The Lore of Proserpine," strikes into a rather new vein. He had always refused to tell anything about himself, but in this book he gives a series of sketches and stories, some of which are directly biographical, and others—fairy stories for grown-ups—indirectly biographical, in that they present the writer's intimate viewpoint of the relative values in life. As for E. W. Hornung, he returns to that field in which his name was made—that of unusual crime, done with an infinite cleverness; but in this case the heroes play the parts of semi-detectives, and not of crooks. Their non-fiction list contains the following works, both important and popular: Henry James' "A Small Boy, and Others," concerned with his own childhood and that of his brother, William James; Price Collier's "Germany and the Germans"; James Huneker's "The Pathos of Distance," a series of studies of artists, writers and current questions; William T. Hornaday's "Our Vanishing Wild Life: Its Extermination and Preservation"; Linda Hull Larned's "The New Hostess of To-day," comprising the substance of her earlier work, "The Hostess of To-day," but actually, if not technically, a new work; another volume in the compact General History of Art Series, "Art in Egypt," by G. Maspero, Director-General of the Service of Antiquities in Egypt, with almost 600 illustrations; "Art Museums and Schools," lectures by G. Stanley Hall, Kenyon Cox, Stockton Axson and Oliver S. Tonks; an important two-volume "Life of John Paul Jones," by Mrs. Reginald De-Koven; two volumes containing the letters of General Meade, the victor of Gettysburg; a new volume in their Original Narratives of Early American History Series, called "The Journal of Dankers and Sluyter"; "Missionary Explorers Among the American Indians," by Mary G. Humphreys; Frederic C. Howe's "European Cities at Work"; a new edition of Charles W. Furlong's book, "The Gateway to the Sahara," which contains new matter concerning the Italian-Turkish War and the Italian occupation of Tripoli; and "Monarchial Socialism in Germany," by Elmer Roberts. In the way of plays, they are bringing out a volume of the plays of Bjornstjerne Björnson, which contains "The New System," "The Gauntlet," "Beyond Human Power" a one-volume collection of the later plays of John Galsworthy; and a one-volume collection of the plays of August Strindberg, recently published in several volumes.

Travellers: J. L. Crowder (coast and large cities); Melville Minton (South and New England); A. S. Knapp (Middle West); F. H. Marling and H. C. Bauer (New York City); R. C. Stolle (Boston and Philadelphia).

SMALL, MAYNARD & COMPANY are publishing the first volume on the "war of the five nations, "The Balkan War," by Philip Gibbs, special correspondent of the London Graphic with the Bulgarian army, and Bernard Grant, special correspondent of the London Daily Mirror with the Turkish army; "The Confession of a Fool," a curious autobiographical volume, by August Strindberg; "The Empires of the Far East: A Study of Japan and of Her Colonial Possessions, of China and Manchuria and of the Political Questions of Eastern Asia and the Pacific," by Lancelot Lawton, for five years special correspondent of the Daily Telegraph in Tokyo and Manchuria, in two volumes; "English Literature, 1880-1905," by J. M. Kennedy; "A Modern History of the English People," by R. H. Gretton, Volume I., 1880-1898; "The Eurhythmics of Jaques-Dalcroze"; "King Edward in His True Colors," by Edward Legge; "The Law of a Household," by Eunice Beecher, a volume on household management; "The Louvre," by E. E. Richards; "To Mesopotamia and Kurdistan in Disguise," by E. B.

Soane; "The National Gallery," by J. E. Crawford Flitch; "New Lives for Old," by William Carleton, an interesting sequel to "One Way Out"; "Our Book of Memories," by Mrs. Campbell Praed and Justin McCarthy; "The Problems of the Pacific," by Frank Fox, giving an insight into the problems presented by the Panama Canal; "Republican France: 1870-1912," by Ernest A. Vizetelly; "Ripostes" (poems), by Ezra Pound; "Syndicalism and the General Strike: An Explanation," by Arthur D. Lewis; "Tommy Tregennis," by Mary E. Phillips; "Uncharted Seas: A Novel," by Robert Adger Bowen; "The Windham Papers," being the life and correspondence of the Rt. Hon. William Windham (1750-1810), a member of Pitt's first cabinet and the ministry of "all the talents," including hitherto unpublished letters from George III., the Dukes of York and Gloucester, Pitt, Fox, Burke, Canning, Lords Minto, Castlereagh, Grenville, Nelson and Malone, Doctor Johnson, Cobbett, Doctor Burney, etc., with an introduction by the Earl of Rosebery; "Inside the Ropes," by Charles E. Van Loan; "The Lucky Seventh," also by Charles E. Van Loan; "With the Conquered Turk," by Major Lionel James, of the London Times; "A Modern Pilgrim in Mecca," by A. J. B. Wabell; and "Toya, the Unlike," by Eleanor Mercein Kelly.

Travellers: Nathaniel L. Tenney (large cities in the West and Middle West); George W. Elliott (South and Central West); Desmond FitzGerald (the Pacific coast).

The Stewart & Kidd Company, of Cincinnati, formerly the Robert Clarke Company, this spring have a strong line, including the following books: "The Business of Farming," by William C. Smith, author of "How to Grow 100 Bushels of Corn per Acre on Worn Soil," a complete history of the science of farming, from the dawn of creation down to the present time, dealing with every phase and feature of the farm; "European Dramatists," by Prof. Archibald Henderson," author of "George Bernard Shaw: His Life and Works," a scholarly volume, dealing with nine great figures, namely, Ibsen, Maeterlinck, Shaw, Wilde, Strindberg, Barker, Schnitzler, Yeats and Synge; "In the Bog," by Katherine Sharp, a series of beautifully written nature essays; "U. S. Money Vs. Corporation Currency," by Alfred Owen Crozier, a complete expose of the great Central Bank conspiracy; "Economy and System in the Bakery," by Emil Braun, a handy manual of up-to-date money-saving suggestions for large and small bakeries; and "The Civil War Literature of Ohio," by Daniel J. Ryan, former Secretary of the State of Ohio. This firm reports a growing demand for all their dramatic literature, in which are included Strindberg's "Easter" and "Lucky Pehr"; "George Bernard Shaw: His Life and Works"; Emerson Venable's "The Hamlet Problem and its Solution." "How to Grow 100 Bushels of Corn per Acre on Worn Soil" is now in its second edition. The fifth edition of Boccaccio's "Decameron," rice paper edition; third edition of Wither's "Chronicles of Border Warfare," and seventh edition of General Hiram M. Chittenden's "The Yellowstone National Park" are issued. They also have several volumes of popular poetry, published late last fall—Everard Jack Appleton's "The Quiet Courage, and Other Songs of the Unafraid"; M. Jay Flannery's "Songs Under Open Skies"; John A. Johnson's "Three Visions, and Other Poems"; Marshall Moreton's "The Dance of Dinwiddie"; and W. H. Venable's "June on the Miami."

Travellers: John G. Kidd (larger Eastern cities); Laurens Maynard (Pacific coast); Walter Pettibone (Middle West and smaller Eastern cities). The following jobbers, by special arrangements, will handle this firm's books in their territories: The Baker & Taylor Co., in New York; DeWolfe & Fiske Company, Boston; A. C. McClurg & Company, Chicago; the J. K. Gill Company, Portland.

Frederick A. Stokes Company believe they have a better spring line this year than ever before, although their spring lists for the past few years have included such titles as "The Montessori Method," "Woman and Labor," "Stover at Yale," "To M. L. G.," Edna Ferber's books, etc. This year they will publish, in March, Owen Johnson's "The Sixty-first Second," which, with a wider appeal than "Stover at Yale," has been exceedingly popular as a serial in McClure's. In February will appear "The Life Mask," a novel by the anonymous author of "To M. L. G.," which furnished one of the sensations of 1912. "Roast Beef Medium," by Edna Ferber, contains the complete career of Emma McChesney, introduced to the world through the pages of the American Magazine. The book will be illustrated by James Montgomery Flagg. A novel by a new author, of whom great things are expected, is "Bobbie, General Manager," a story of New England life, by Olive Higgins Prouty, to be published in February. Harold Bindloss' "Ranching for Sylvia" may be relied on for popularity, as every one of this author's books for the past four years has sold better than its predecessor. Other noteworthy novels on the Stokes' list are "Frontiers of the Heart," translated from the French of Victor Margueritte; "The Declension of Henry D'Albiac," a book of social satire by V. Goldie; "The Kingdom," a religious novel by Harold Elsdale Goad. The list is equally strong in serious books. Two of these are on the Montessori method, one of the most striking additions to thought and progress in 1912. In April, Dr. Montessori's "Pedagogical Anthropology," which gives the basis of her educational theories, will appear in octavo form, with illustrations. The translator, Dr. Frederic Taber Cooper, says the book will be exceedingly valuable for the general reader. In March will come "A Guide to the Montessori Method," by Ellen Yale Stevens, of the Montessori American Committee; it is a smaller book, giving an interpretation of the method, practical instructions for use of material and a clear exposition of the underlying psychology for mothers, teachers and general readers. "Smith and the Church," by Rev. Harry H. Beattys, with an introduction by Meredith Nicholson, discusses in popular language the questions of why the modern man does not go to church, and what can be done about it. R. F. Foster, the great card expert, contributes a handbook on "Coon-can," or "Rum," a new game gaining popularity in New York and London. A fascinating book of popular science, "The Childhood of Animals," by P. Chalmers Mitchell, shows what relations the period of youth bears to the rest of life in all kinds of animals, and tells the relations of these facts to mankind. Contemporaneous with the visit of Alfred Noyes to this country, there will be published his "Tales of the Mermaid Tavern," which have been running in Blackwood's Magazine, and also his "Complete Poetical Works" to date. In nature books, Stokes will add "Rock Gardens" to their Garden Flowers in Color Series, and will also publish another book on that popular subject, entitled 'The Story of My Rock Garden," by Reginald A. Malby. A larger volume will be "Hardy Perennials and Herbaceous Borders," by Walter P. Wright, author of "Roses and Rose Gardens." The nature books are all illustrated in colors. A volume on Fromentin will be added to the Masterpieces in Color Series, and one on Rossetti to the Nineteenth Century Art Books. "The Craft of the Crochet Hook," by Flora Klickmann, will rival the popularity of the same author's "The Home Art Crochet Book."

Travellers: Frank A. Coombs (Pacific coast and large cities west of Mississippi, Chicago and other Middle Western cities); Henry F. Savage (New England, large cities in the East and Middle West); James L. Nerney (South and part of Middle West); George W. Kelly (smaller cities of East and Middle West).

STURGIS & WALTON COMPANY'S spring list is led by "Lanagan, Amateur Detective," by Edward H. Hurlbut. It will be recalled that this book ran in part in Collier's Weekly, and that the central figure in it, Lanagan, a San Francisco amateur detective and police reporter, had a very warm welcome. To juveniles by old favorites are promised: "Tad Sheldon, Boy Scout: Stories of His Patrol," by John Fleming Wilson, author of "Tad Sheldon, Second Class Scout"; and Mrs. Augusta H. Seaman's "Little Mamselle of the Wilderness," a story of LaSalle and His Pioneers. Mrs. Seaman will be remembered as the author of "Jacqueline of the Carrier Pigeons" and "When a Cobbler Ruled the King." "Gloosecap, the Great Chief, and Other Stories," by Mrs. Emelyn Newcomb Partridge, author of "Story Telling in School and Home," is a collection of legends of the Micmac Indians, retold for children. The list from this house also includes a witty and daring book, concerned in a common sense and yet philosophical way with love and marriage, "The Love Seeker," by Maud Churton Braby, author of "Modern Marriage and How to Bear It"; "Auction Pinochle," by A. P. George; "Heroines of Modern Progress," by Elmer C. Adams and Warren Dunham Foster; and "Heroines of Modern Religion," edited by Warren Dunham Foster and written by a group of authors each particularly fitted to handle his own subject; "The Price of Inefficiency," by Frank Koester, a volume which lays bare national inefficiency, governmental and non-governmental, and illustrates the points scored by reference to the methods and results obtained in other countries; Prof. John M. Gillette's "Constructive Rural Sociology"; Hugh H. Lusk's "Social Welfare in New Zealand"; "Work and Life," by Prof. Ira W. Howerth, of the University of California, who believes an organization of our economic institutions, resulting in more equal distribution of their benefits to all members of society, should be effected; and "The Education of To-morrow," by Prof. Arland D. Weeks, a plea for the adaptation of school curricula to the needs of an economic democracy.

Travellers: Laurens Maynard (coast); L. B. Sturgis (East).

THE VIR PUBLISHING COMPANY.

Traveller: L. M. Cross leaves, March 1, for the coast, stopping, en route, in the leading cities of the East and Middle West, returning by the southern route.

THE JOHN C. WINSTON COMPANY is offering for spring a list strong in all departments, particularly in fiction. In "The Reluctant Lover," by Stephen McKenna, a note of unconventionality is struck in the portrayal of an ultra-modern young man and a determined girl, even more advanced, who sets out to capture his cool, chaste heart. A love story, full of the subtle mystery and charm of the Sahara, is "Written in the Sand," by G. R. Duval. "The Mystery of 31 New Inn," by R. Austin Freeman, presents a new solver of mysteries in John Thorndyke, lawyer, scientist. "Foreordained, with Other Stories," by Everhardt Armstrong, is a collection in the style of the modern French and Russian schools of utter realism. Among the new works of biography are "Monarchs and Men," by Maximilian Harden, a work which is creating discussion abroad, and "Notable Women in History," by Willis J. Abbot, succinct sketches of famous women. Under miscellaneous works are found a revised edition of "Panama: The Isthmus and Canal," by Forbes Lindsay, which covers the entire history of the Isthmus and Canal from the earliest days to the time of completion; also the comprehensive and economical "Winston Cook Book," by Helen Cramp. Under standard works, the firm announces a new series of Winston's Illustrated Pocket Classics, consisting of 121 titles. The travellers are also carrying many holiday works and many surprises in the juvenile line to supplement the already large list by such successful authors as Gabrielle Emilie Jackson, Margaret Vandercook, Edward S. Ellis, Jane E. Fryer, etc.

Travellers: E. M. Leavens, A. L. Bonney, E. A. Merriam, W. D. Hicks, W. O. Shepherd and J. Meyer on the road, while B. F. Hitchens will continue to make his headquarters in Chicago as manager of the Chicago branch.

Representing The John C. Winston Co.

A. L. Bonney was born in Lewiston, Maine. Upon completing his education, he accepted a position in the Lewiston Municipal Court, which he held for nearly four years, resigning to "get out into the world." After a brief experience on the road with two concerns in Maine, he engaged with A. D. MacLachlan, Boston, then American agent for William Collins, Sons & Co. In 1892, the business was transferred to The International Bible Agency, New York, and Mr. Bonney, experienced as a traveller, went with the line, which was soon increased four fold. Ten years later the business was taken over by the John C. Winston Co. Mr. Bonney is now making his seventeenth trip to the Pacific Coast and commencing his twenty-third season, practically continuous with one line. He also covers large sections of the middle West and East.

JOSEPH PERCIVAL NICHOLS

Of Charles F. Nichols & Son, Concord, N. H.

JOSEPH P. NICHOLS was fortunate in having a niche in the book world ready for him—his father starting him as a clerk in his own store—and his father was fortunate in having a son who could so satisfactorily fill the niche! From his entrance into business life in 1904 his responsibilities have become progressively greater, until now practically the entire management of the store falls on his shoulders. Mr. Nichols confesses to a "busy field of activity" and a "hobby," the first secret societies and the second music. He has been District Deputy Grand Master I. O. O. F. and Exalted Ruler of the local lodge B. P. O. Elks, beside other orders. In the musical field he is director of the Concord Mandolin and Guitar Orchestra. These connections give him a very large list of friends and acquaintances.

EDWARD H. DART

Buyer for the Book, Stationery and Music Department of A. Hamburger & Sons, Los Angeles.

EDWARD H. DART has been a department store bookman almost from the beginning, although his apprenticeship in the book business was served in the Western News Company, Chicago. He was then assistant for several years in the book department of Siegel-Cooper's Chicago store, going from there eleven years ago to become buyer for the book, stationery and sheet music departments of Hamburger's. Mr. Dart knows the trade from coast to coast and, like every far westerner, is an enthusiastic boomer. "The West has a great future," he says. "Business has been splendid since the first of the year. Last year was the largest business ever in Los Angeles, and I look for a wonderful increase this year."

DUKE HILL

Manager and Buyer, Book and Stationery Division, Montgomery Ward & Co., Chicago.

"HAPPY is that nation," runs the old proverb, "'whose annals are brief." Duke Hill confesses to the same felicitous career; "there is not much to say about it," he says. He started in the book business with A. C. McClurg & Co. in the capacity of errand boy, later was transferred to the Library Department under Mr. Burtch. After serving under him for several years, he accepted a position with Montgomery Ward & Co., to build up their Library Department and take charge of the correspondence in the Book Division. He served in that capacity for five years, when he was given the position of manager and buyer for the Book Division, to which the Stationery Division was added a little later. He has held this position now for fourteen years.

RALPH WILSON

Of McDevitt-Wilson, New York.

RALPH WILSON started business in the bookselling field just ten years ago at the McDevitt Book Shop, 1 Barclay Street, New York. When the founder of the business, the well-known itinerant bookseller and traveling auctioneer, Dion W. McDevitt, died, in 1901, his affairs were continued by his gifted daughter, Miss Cora E., who established herself opposite the old Astor House on Broadway. After the marriage of Mr. Wilson and Miss McDevitt the firm became "McDevitt-Wilson," and in 1909 they moved to the new Hudson Terminal Building, where they established one of the most attractive little shops in town.

Buyer for Denholm & McKay Company, Worcester, Mass.

W. C. EVERETT, buyer of books and stationery for the Denholm & McKay Company, of Worcester, is one of the fortunate men who have "grown up" in the book business. 'As far back as he can remember,' he says, he has been in a bookstore, being first connected with his father in the book and stationery business in Woodstock, N. B. His first department store experience was in 1896, when he came to Boston and accepted a position as salesman with the Jordan-Marsh Company. In 1900 he came to Worcester, where he has since been located.

RECOLLECTIONS OF PHILADELPHIA BOOKSELLERS.

BY WILLIAM M. BAINS.

LIKE all normal boys I came to the age when I considered entering into business life, and as my father was a friend of Mr. Chas. C. Haffelfinger, arrangements were made for me to start with the J. B. Lippincott Co. It had been only a few years since they had moved from 4th Street and had built up a large publishing and stationery business. In the retail department was Jessie Parry, known to all booklovers, a man with a wonderful memory, reputed to be able to state, upon request, whether a book was in stock and even the row and shelf where it could be found.

About this time there was a difference between Mr. Lippincott and his partners, resulting in the withdrawal of Mr. Edmund Claxton and Mr. George Remsen. A new firm was formed with Mr. C. C. Haffelfinger as co-partner, he being the salesman for the South. The firm was then called Claxton, Remsen & Haffelfinger, and after having secured certain plates they started in the book, publishing, and stationery business, at 819-21 Market Street.

When this change came I went with the new concern. Mr. Claxton was a most exacting man, and most particular about punctuality. He himself always arrived at the office at 7.30 A.M. and his orders were that the mail boy should arrive exactly on time. If the boy were early, he would say when he arrived in his gruff way, with his face wrinkled, "Why did you come so early, boy?" Or if he were late, the question would be put in the same manner, "Why were you late, boy; can't you be on time?" How often I remember going to his office and saying, "Mr. Claxton, a lady wishes to see you." His reply would come very spontaneously, "I wish her in Paradise. It isn't Mrs. Claxton, is it?"

Mr. Remsen was always where least expected, which you can imagine kept us on the alert. He was given the name of "pirate" for whatever the boys did he saw or found out about it. Much night work was done in those days, and one night I recall especially the boys all went out to their suppers, and I told Palmer, who carried the key, that I wanted to go home early so would work until he returned. At 9.15 P.M. he had not returned, so I opened the double doors and closed them behind me. Finding that they locked themselves I went home. The next morning Palmer came to me and informed me in a most pompous manner that the next time I did anything like that and didn't wait for him to return he would see Mr. Claxton about it. I told him that he might go see him now, and not wait until the next time, but he decided not to go and there was no further trouble. Another evening the boys came back from their suppers with watermelons, and a real true watermelon party that was, for the rinds were scattered from one end of the store to the other. But there was a cleaning-up party as well, for we knew Mr. Claxton would be on hand at 7.30 A.M.

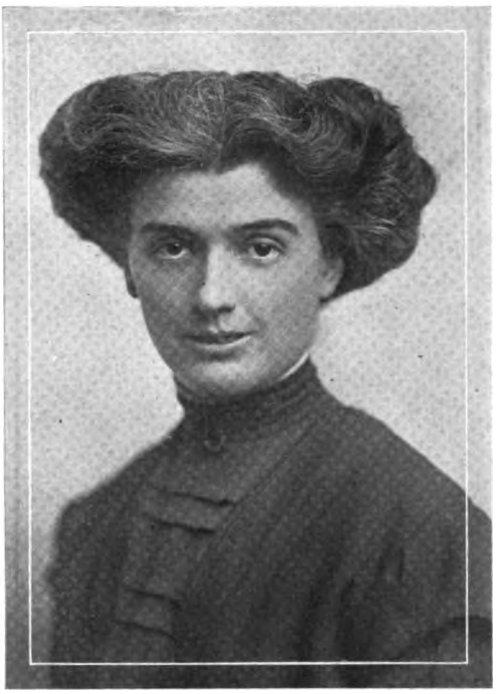
Mr. Haffelfinger was a very convivial man, and loved to take the customers around the corner. One who was very often with him was Walt Whitman, the Camden Poet. Another employee, known to many in this room, was David Morrison, associated with the firm from the start. They tell a story of his going with Mr. Haffelfinger to Prosser's Restaurant, then on the south side of Market above 8th. After having duplicated the order, which was for terrapin, he enjoyed his meal thoroughly until it came time to pay the bill, when he concluded that the duplicating of orders is not always safe, especially when the pocketbook is limited.



At this time associated with the house were A. G. LaRue, Jerry Weatherby, Edward Meeks and Edwin E. Ekstein. The firm did a large business before very long and were forced to look for larger quarters. Mr. Weightman, a life-long friend of Mr. Claxton's, built the building at 624-28 Market Street and leased it to them.

Well do I remember this, my first experience in moving. Horrible thought. Mr. Remsen instructed me to send the books and stationery and sheet stocks to the new store. Before noon word came to me, "Stop sending any more cases." At the new store they were all tied up and the cases were piled high on the pavement, blocking the highway. Finally things were under way and all was settled in new surroundings.

About this time Mr. Remsen, buyer and manager, decided to retire, withdrawing his part of the capital. Then Mr Haffelfinger filled this position. Stock accumulated, and the business did not seem to increase. So it was decided to move again, this time into a store just built at 030 Market Street. The moving was placed in my hands, and after my previous experience I made up my mind this moving would be different. During the time that our stock was being taken to the new store, by a planned scheme, orders were filled every day. If I had time I would tell you how this was done but I must go on.

At this time, Mr. Haffelfinger withdrew from the firm, leaving Mr. Edmund Claxton and his son, Robert B. Claxton, to carry on the business under the name of Edmund Claxton & Company. They had published during these years many books, among which I would mention Trautwine's "Pocket Book Engineering," a monument to Mr. John Trautwine, who worked on it for 30 years. It is now published by John Wiley & Sons, and edited by the son of the author, John C. Trautwine, Jr.; Rober's "Pocket Books" were very successful, and are now published by our fellow member, David McKay. There were many others which I cannot take time to enumerate.

Now will you take a little tour with me around Philadelphia, not "Seeing Philadelphia" but "Seeing Philadelphia Bookstores and Bookmen" as they were at this time.

KATHRYN A. DAVIS

Buyer for Book and Stationery Departments, Edw. Malley Company, New Haven.

MISS KATHRYN A. DAVIS is one of the people who have made good "from the ground up." Seventeen years ago she started in with the Edw. Malley Company as a cash girl. As clerk and salesgirl she developed the necessary training and knowledge, and so successfully that when Miss Belle Morris left the store a year ago last November, Miss Davis was put into her place. Miss Davis modestly says she doesn't know all the buying game yet, but if we may judge from other reports, she is an almighty good learner! She ascribes to Mr. Colliers, now with Raphael Tuck Company, a large share of the credit for her successful book education.

At 10th and Arch Streets was the Methodist Book Store, under the charge of Dr. Samuel Thomas, who for so many years edited their paper. It is now under the management of Mr. Yeakel. Continuing on Arch to 9th, we would find Perkenpine & Higgins, and around the corner the Lutheran Publication Society, of which Mr. J. K. Shryock had charge. He is still living, but has been blind for a number of years. Later this firm moved to 1424 Arch Street. At 7th and Arch was Smith, English & Company, formerly on 6th Street. They carried the largest and most complete theological stock. On the same street above 6th, Garrigues & Brothers published Sunday School books and supplies. The American Baptist Publication Society, of which Benjamin Griffith was secretary, was located at 530 Arch Street. Afterwards they moved to 1420 Chestnut Street, and later to their new building at 17th and Chestnut Streets. Dr. A. J. Rowland succeeded Dr. Griffith. On Arch Street above 5th was the John Bancroft Co. handling school furniture and school supplies of all kinds, including books. Associated with them were Highley, McClees, Oles and others who then were the leading men in the line. Theodore Bliss was then located on 5th in the publishing and book business. At 66 North 4th Street Bradley & Company published several successful books, one of the most successful of which was the "Bradley Atlas." This and the Mitchell "General Atlas" were the best issued. In the same square was Uriah Hunt Sons, who carried on a successful book and stationery business and published the "Hunt Comly Speller." On 3rd Street were Sower, Barnes & Potts, publishers of school books. Later they removed to Arch Street, above 6th, and are now at 18th and Arch. E. H. Butler & Co., who published Mitchell's "Geography" and other very popular school books, were in business at 137 South 4th Street. I remember as a boy, while waiting for some books in this store, I was whistling, when Mr. J. Hunt Butler appeared and said very roughly, "Stop that." This made a great impression on my mind and I never forgot it. Mr. Theodore H. Butler, a cousin, was a splendid man and knew how to treat a boy, so the comparison between the two was always very obvious. In later years it was my privilege to meet Mr. Theodore Butler at the Art Club where for many years he was Chairman of the Library Committee. Next to the Butler store were the Trade Sales Rooms, where the book trade sales were held. Publishers would consign their books, catalogues would be prepared, then the booksellers would attend, bidding for the books they wanted. At 406 Walnut Street, afterward Walnut above 9th, was H. C. Baird, publisher of scientific books. At 306 Chestnut Street could be found the famous house of T. B. Peterson & Bros., publishers of the Southworth, Stevens and other novels, and of the Peterson Magazine, then having the largest circulation of any periodical. At 326 Chestnut Street, W. W. Harding, publisher of Bibles, was located. From this firm came A. J. Holman & Co., which for many years have been so successful. We could find at 503 Chestnut Street, A. Winch, later the Central News Company, who occupied the Old Library Building previous to the erection of the Drexel Building. On Minor Street above 5th were E. C. & J. Biddle, school book publishers, and W. H. Fortescue, later publisher of many of the Biddle publications. On 6th Street above Chestnut were Kay Brothers (afterward at Sansom above 7th), law book publishers, and on the 2nd floor was T. E. Zell, publisher of school books and the once famous and most practical one-volume Encyclopedia, issued in parts at 10c. each, and then in a bound volume.

HENRY FRED GAERTNER

Associate Buyer in the Book Department of The Burrows Brothers Co.

HENRY FRED GAERTNER, or "Fred" as he is always called, has been an associate buyer in the Book Department of The Burrows Brothers Co., Cleveland, for many years. He is of German descent, his parents having been born in the old country. He began his trade career twenty-five years ago as errand boy of fourteen with the old firm of Cobb, Andrews & Co. He was with this concern for four years, when the Burrows Brothers Co. bought them out. When H. B. Burrows lived in Cleveland and was buyer for the Wholesale Department, "Fred" made many trips to New York in the spring and winter purchasing campaigns as his assistant. He is known as one of the most popular men in the booktrade.

Eldredge Brothers, publishers of school books, now Hinds, Noble & Eldredge, were also on 6th, and later on 7th above Market Street. On 6th above Chestnut were Lindsay & Blakiston, publishers of medical books, later formed into the P. Blakiston Sons & Co., now at at 1012 Walnut Street. George W. Childs, then in the Ledger Building, Chestnut and 6th, published Kane's "Arctic Exploration," "Allibone Authors" and many other books. Employed by Mr. Childs at this time, was a man whom everybody knew as George Robinson. His mind was not exactly balanced and, as a consequence, he was the victim of many jokes. One time when he was at Lippincott's, I remember he finally appealed to Mr. Lippincott saying, "They tor-all the time." So the order was that any one who tormented George be discharged. Not many days later was discovered in the basement by laxton who, thinking he would have fun, threw a ball of twine at him, and ed his hat over his eyes. George rushed Lippincott with his tale of woe but investigation it was found that the one was a member of the firm, so no was discharged. 21 S. 7th was the busiplace of Alfred Martien, who afterward to Chestnut above 12th, where he shed many Sunday School books. On tnut above 7th was Duffield Ashmead's al book store, successful for a number ears. George G. Evans was also running famous Gift Book Shop, where the purser of a book would receive a present of elry. On Sansom Street above 7th was C. Lea, publisher of many medical and a miscellaneous books. The firm is now & Febiger. Just below 8th on Sansom the store of John Campbell, who handled scellaneous and law books. Mr. Campbell, ther of our fellow bookseller, William mpbell, was the possessor of a very fine vate library. Porter & Coates were on nsom Street, later 822 Chestnut Street. n one occasion, I remember, when I was nterviewing Morrison Coates on the question f having all book stores close early on Saturdays, he said: "There are too many holidays now, we will not close." I tried to inform him that if he would not come into the agreement all the stores would have to keep open, but he turned to me and said: "We will not close early." So for some time after that we all kept open until 6 P.M. on Saturdays. Later this firm moved to their fine store on the southwest corner of 9th and Chestnut, and then to Chestnut below 13th Street. The Sunday School Union was at 1122 Chestnut Street, publishing Sunday School books and supplies. Below 13th Street was the Episcopal Book Store. Below Broad on Chestnut was the Presbyterian Board, under the charge of Mr. Black. Later they moved to the Witherspoon Building.

Now that I have finished my tour of the bookstores and booksellers of Philadelphia about the time of 1884, I am like the small boy who was taken from his poor surroundings in a little court in one of the large cities to the country, where he enjoyed to the fullest extent the pleasures which only the country can afford a boy. When the time to come home came close to hand, he said: "Gee, but I hate to go back." This is my feeling, for in going back to the Clax- Company we find that it is no more a ok store, but that it has gone vorse, until at this date Mr. n assignment, and Mr. Will- entered a judgment for $250.- est, and placed the Sheriff- rge. Later at a meeting of Mr. Weightman offered to ac- yment whatever might be re- e stock, plates and accounts, is share with the other credi-

Buyer and Manager of the Book Dept., Jones Store Co., Kansas City, Mo.

ALEXANDER M. LEVY started in the book business at the age of fourteen, as errand boy for Hurst & Co., then in their infancy. After staying with them for about twelve years he went traveling through Southern territory and the East, later taking a position as buyer with the Espenhain Dry Goods Co., of Kansas City. After two years he went to the Simpson Crawford Co., of New York, then returned west to the Jones Store Co., where for the last two years he has been buyer and manager of the Book and Stationery Department. Levy is well known and a popular boy among the various book buyers and traveling salesmen.

tors, if they would accept this offer. Of course they accepted it, for it was most generous. Mr. Leavenroth, of New York, said: "In all my business experience I have never seen such generosity." Mr. Weightman did this because of the lifelong friendship with Mr. Claxton, and had the latter gone to him in the first place and done as Mr. Weightman wanted, there would have been no assignment; nor would there have been any judgment entered.

After the business was closed up Mr. Weightman started Mr. Claxton in the publishing business with Mr. Meeks. This business was continued until Mr. Claxton's death, when the plates were sold. David McKay purchasing most of them.

When this business was closed out I w

J. ROY COLLIER
Allen Book and Printing Company, Troy, N. Y.

J. Roy Collier, buyer for the book and stationery departments of the Allen Book and Printing Company, has had about eight years' experience in the book business, starting with Arthur M. Allen in Troy in 1905, and being made secretary upon their incorporation in 1910. He takes care of most of the buying for the book and stationery department, and always likes to meet the boys on their trips. He states that he is "a firm believer in the net price system, and glad to note that for the past few years the publishers and booksellers have been working together in harmony to bring about conditions so that the bookseller can make a living profit."

to the J. B. Lippincott Company, where I assisted Mr. Horace Ridings in the jobbing department and also continued to look after my city trade which I had brought with me. Captain Wood was manager of the company, and I found him always ready to listen and to decide things justly. He died later in the year, and his brother, Frank Wood, took his place.

Mr. Lippincott was in poor health and died soon after I went with the company, so I had no personal experience with him. Mr. Craig Lippincott was taking his father's place and Mr. J. Bertram Lippincott was in the manufacturing department. In those days we did not have cumulative catalogues or trade list annuals, but single catalogues of each publisher, consequently it was necessary that you know the publisher before you could find the book. The stock was kept with the publications of one firm all together and they were not marked. But there were not so many publishers or books as we have to-day, so perhaps we were no brighter than present-day booksellers. It was a happy family gathered there in the store of the Lippincott Company, and we had many good times, but we all had to work hard. Mr. Kimble was head of the publication department, Mr. Ridings of the jobbing department, Mr. George Thomas of the retail department, and Mr. Thomas P. Bacon of the stationery department. David McKay and Jos. Parker were also in the publication department. The former purchased the second-hand business of Reese Welsh on 9th Street, and after some years sold the stock to Leary Stuart & Co. and removed to 1022 Market Street, later purchasing the property on South Washington Square. George Barrie, for a number of years with the Lippincott Company, afterward associated himself with George Gebbie, forming the firm of Gebbie & Barrie. Later they separated, Mr. Barrie establishing a new business, now known as George Barrie & Son. George W. Jacobs assisted Mr. Ridings in the jobbing department, after I went into the retail department, but like the rest of the men, he left and opened his own store, a publishing, book and stationery business, on 15th below Chestnut Street. Later he moved to 1218 Walnut Street, and in connection with this establishment opened the publishing house at 208 West Washington Square. H. W. Fisher & Company was formed when Mr. Fisher left H. T. Coates & Co., the store being first on 15th Street, later on 15th below Walnut. Porter & Coates, now the H. T. Coates & Co., sold their publishing business to J. C. Winston & Co. and the miscellaneous stock to John Wanamaker. Just about this time Mr. E. Campion opened the well known Campion Book Store on Walnut Street. The Penn Publishing Company was established by J. W. Shoemaker, and the growth of this business is largely due to the efforts of our active fellow member, C. C. Shoemaker, and those associated with him.

In these days of apartments, there seems to be no room for the large private library, formerly prominent. Now we find just a few books, for there is neither space to hold them nor time to appreciate them. I am reminded of the patient recovering from typhoid fever, to whom the nurse said: "To-morrow I will give you something to eat." This, of course, was welcome news to the starved patient. But when to-morrow came the nurse appeared with a teaspoonful of tapioca. Nothing was said by the sick one at first, but after a great deal of thought he remarked: "Will you please bring me a postage stamp?" When she had brought it, wondering all the time what he was going to do with it, he held it in his hand and said: "Thank you, I just wanted to read." It is certainly true to-day that a very few books must suffice.

In 1897 I purchased the jobbing stock of the Lippincott Co. for Strawbridge & Clothier.

opening their book department. Here I had many new experiences, as the work in a department store is so different in many ways. Some of the most troublesome experiences were in connection with the innovation of the return business, a system much abused. After three years of pleasant relations in this store I left, opening my own business.

In closing I feel somewhat like the old lady, famed for her health and thrift, who, upon being congraulated on the former, said: "We be pretty well for old folks, Josiah and me. Josiah hasn't had no ailin' time for fifty years, 'cept last winter. And I ain't never suffered but one day in my life, and that was when I took some of the medicine Josiah had left over, so's how it shouldn't be wasted." I thank you for taking this dose of book medicine, which I had left over, and I trust that you will not suffer very long.

VANISHED BOOKSHOPS.

A CORRESPONDENT, said the New York Times recently editorially, complains of the disappearance from New York of many old bookshops. No longer does he find those delightful marts of books old and new, such as abounded once in Twenty-third Street, whose wonderful treasures he was accustomed to explore week after week, with the certainty of discovering surprises on every shelf. Let our complaining reader trust our assurance that it is New York that is changing, not its people, and we shall be in the way of apprehending the facts. Human nature does not alter, but times and conditions do. There are at least as many booklovers for every thousand inhabitants in New York to-day as there ever were; probably more. New York still goes to substantial books for its substantial reading unquestionably in greater proportion than ever before. It is not true that New York's literary taste is declining; in proportion to population it is steadily bettering. Book sales are growing faster than population, and books of scientific and other substantial purpose are beating fiction in the race. Even in fiction, while it is true that this generation in America is producing less that is conspicuously good than some of its predecessors, it is also true that the reign of unspeakable trash is over, that even our worst must nowadays make pretension to the outward appearance, at least, of form and taste, and that the general average of all kinds on the market is much the highest average we have yet produced.

Our correspondent must take stock of our enormous increase of wealth and population, with its crowding and embellishment and exuberance of living—conditions from which bookishness, however virile, flies to the retirement of side street, study and library. He must go to lesser towns to find the conditions he admires, but even in Boston the passer in the streets perceives less and less of the old town's love of books. He must also take account of changing trade conditions. The days of his yearning preceded the practical monopolization of popular fiction sales by department stores, and many delightful bookshops which once paid rent and running charges out of fiction have not found living possible from the profit of serious books alone. Business has tended to concentrate in fewer shops of size sufficient to combine under one overhead all varieties of bookselling and kindred businesses, and to compete with department stores in fiction.

He must also recognize that the enormous house-to-house subscription business, which in the past spent itself in futile gift books and scrappy compilations, to-day is scattering to the crossroads the treasures of the world's literature, so that now the farmers of a million wintry hillsides have served to them by parcel post the very wonders that he, after weeks of fascinating browsing, was wont to "discover" now and then hid away on dusty shelves in Twenty-third Street bookshops. The cheap reprints our correspondent despises are meat and drink to countless opening minds then still closed. He will see that we have been struggling upward through an immense cultural and commercial evolution and have emerged enough to grasp some dim conception of the amazing spectacle.

PUBLISHERS' CO-OPERATIVE ADVERTISING.*

A FEW years ago, the advertising men of most of the miscellaneous publishing houses in New York began to meet once a month during the winter season for luncheon; often men from Boston and Philadelphia houses dropped in. No formal organization of this club has been attempted.

Informal talk disclosed a consensus of opinion that gave many of us the courage to stop or decrease certain expenditures the wisdom of which we had, individually, been doubtful about. Among these results have been decreased newspaper advertising, largely through concentration. Comparing notes cut off the source of supplies of some notorious book beggars, who had been receiving in all a good many hundreds of volumes a year, and cut down waste in imprint circulars, posters, co-operative newspaper bookseller advertisements, etc.

Informal committees and discussion of their reports resulted in lists for review copies, one of about 70 papers and magazines for practically all books, and another of about 100 papers and magazines, to receive only titles of wide popularity—and special lists for religious, outdoor, juvenile, and other special classes of books. These lists were put at the disposal of those who had pooled whatever information on the subject they possessed.

Co-operative advertising so far was mainly negative. But the mutual confidence resulting from continued association and the surprising discovery that no one had an appreciable amount of exclusive wisdom, in the field of mutual interest, made the suggestion that we try a positive though modest form of co-operation a welcome one. This took the form of a monthly circular entitled New Books.

The following are the salient points of the agreement governing it:

Each publisher will have one page per issue. If any publisher does not wish to enter for the entire year, he may agree to use four issues only. The expense of each issue will be divided equally between the publishers represented therein.

Style of pages uniform. Maximum of two books on a page. A series of books under an advertised series-title, or books by one author will be regarded as one book. But in any case not more than twelve titles on a page. No title to be repeated under three months; in general the circular should be composed of new books in order to conserve its news value.

To be issued every month except July and August. (Addresses are uncertain in the summer.)

Positions will be determined by lot the first month, and will rotate thereafter.

One thousand names of individuals to be contributed by each publisher.

The complete lists to be kept at the printer's, who will guarantee in writing that it will not be used in whole or in part for any other purpose than the publishers' circular. The committee also to see that the list is not used for other purposes. The committee will include a good library and trade list (about 2000 names).

Those not on the original list who apply for the circular are to receive it free or be charged ten cents for the year, at the discretion of the committee of publication.

One printing establishment will undertake the entire job, from furnishing the paper to addressing, postage and mailing. The printer will render to the committee each month an itemized statement. The committee will O. K. this statement. The printer will then send to each publisher a bill for his share of the total expense. All financial dealings will be handled individually between the various publishers and the printer.

The descriptions should tell in a straightforward way what is in each book, without praising it. Stereotyped adjectives, reviews and quoted opinions will be blacklisted. Publishers should remember that the circular is to be composed of books admittedly excellent, and that its value will depend on how much information it has for the reader.

On the order blank of the circular, the purchaser is requested to buy from the local dealer.

From an Illinois Lumber Dealer:

"I wish to thank you most kindly for the 'Monthly Bulletin of New Books,' the third copy of which I received a few days ago.

"It is just what I have been wishing for for some time. Now I can keep advised of the best new books without having to bother so many publishers for their list of late publications every month or two.

"I am surprised that the plan was not thought of long ago.

"I have already ordered several books from your list.

"Hoping it will prove a great success, and that it will reach my desk regularly, I beg to remain."

From a Philadelphia Publisher:

"You may be interested in knowing that yesterday a lady came in to Jacobs' bookstore with a copy of 'New Books' and bought from them nine of the books advertised in the list."

From a New Jersey Public Library:

"I have received the first copy of 'New Books,' and have examined it with much interest. We shall make use of it as one of the journals which we regularly check for book orders. With many thanks."

From a Denver Mill Owner:

"I think this is one of the finest schemes yet devised to get books before the public, and thank you for same. I earnestly hope you will continue my name on your mailing list. . . . I would appreciate it if you would enter the name of Mr. ——. Mr. —— is a lover of good books, and has a growing library of fiction and standard works."

From a Texas Wholesaler:

"Your book catalogue hits me just right. It simplifies the work of picking out good books to take home for my children to read."

From the City Library Association, of Springfield, Mass.:

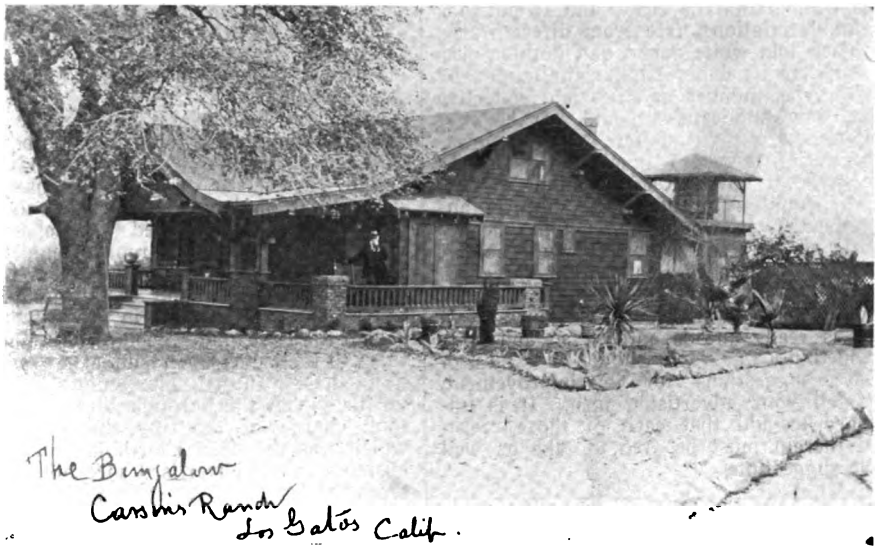
"We can use four or five copies, clipping and using the notices on bulletin boards."

pamphlet, entitled 'New Books.' It is very serviceable, and I have already used the list furnished by you for a number of purchases."

From a Boston Business Man:

"I want about eleven books listed in your October, 1912, issue. Shall I make check payable to you or to each separate publisher?"

[The writer was referred to the local dealer.]



From Macauley Bros., Detroit, Mich.:

"We received the sample copy of your pamphlet, 'New Books,' and during the day we received an order from a gentleman for four books written on this order list. Would it be possible for us to obtain a few extra copies for select customers?"

From a Small Dealer in a Mississippi Town:

"Please mail me regularly 'New Books' monthly. And send to the following names also, who are customers of my book news counter."

It seems from these letters, which are fair samples, that the list is welcome, and that there are people who buy a book after they are told simply and clearly what it is about, without the stimulation of such adjectives as "vivid," "unique," or "red-blooded," and without a collection of laudatory comments such as most of us can collect from respectable sources about practically every book we publish. I do not wish to be understood by add good names until we have a reliable means of announcing important new books of general interest to most of the persons likely to be interested? If this little scheme can develop as it might develop, one of our important problems is in the way of being solved. Some dealers have asked for New Books with imprint. This method of distribution would waste copies through duplication, and the circulars would rarely be mailed or sent regularly, whereas we wish to give New Books the status of a periodical. It would seem better to ask say each of fifty booksellers in important centers to supply the names and addresses of say one hundred selected customers, explaining that the list can be used only for New Books. These names could be collated with the present list and New Books mailed to them in the regular way. The bookseller could watch the results with these customers and send in more names if it seemed to pay. About once a year the list should be revised and interest stimulated by a return postal.

Occasionally, if and when the issue reaches say 50,000 a month, the inclusion, as a special feature, of a new and stimulating contribution by a well known writer, say a George Ade fable on the man without a library or a little essay by Henry Van Dyke, would help sales and attract attention. Such special features would seem better than illustrations or conventional literary gossip. For the present, there is distinctiveness, if not distinction, in the combination of clear, and if possible, graceful descriptions, free from direct praise, with black ink, white paper, and nothing else. One wonders if, under similar limitations of uniform type, number of titles and collective buying, new publications could not be regularly announced (in a few selected newspapers and magazines) much more cheaply than we do it now. Readers might get the habit of running through such uniform announcements. It would be enough cheaper per title so that some money would be left for big type and space, if an author craved it. Do most readers want to know more about a new Oppenheim story, for instance, than that it is ready and is entitled so and so?

If you think New Books should be extended, or have suggestions for its improvement, please tell your advertising men. It is unnecessary to add that each of those represented therein must be free to take as well as give suggestions.

STORY OF A SECOND-HAND BOOK-SHOP.

Rise of a London Shop that Claims to be the Largest in the World — Run by two Young Men on Distinctively American Lines.

We think we have most of the "biggest" things over here in America, but, if we are to believe the London correspondent of the Buffalo Express, the biggest second-hand book business in the world is done by two young Londoners named Foyle. Probably there are really bigger ones—Australia might put in one bid for first place—but there is no question that the story of the rise of the Foyle business is an interesting one.

Just seven years ago, and almost by accident, the Foyles, one seventeen and the other eighteen, started in business with a stock-in-trade consisting of a dozen old shorthand manuals, worth, maybe, 50 cents the lot. Today they own about 2,500,000 volumes, the million or so of which have been sorted and catalogued occupy twenty miles of shelving, and the balance of which practically fill a big warehouse.

The Foyles do business the world over, and their morning mail averages over 1000 letters, among which, by the way, are some choice specimens of humor. Since they started in business, in a little lock-up shop in Peckham, they have moved three times, and the present headquarters in Charing Cross Road, where over 70 persons are employed, and which was opened quite recently, is one of the most imposing establishments in that thoroughfare which is almost given up to similar businesses and is famous as the happy-hunting ground of bibliophiles.

It really was almost pure accident that started the Foyles in the old-book business, and when they decided to embark in it they looked upon it as so risky a venture that they decided not to risk both of their then livelihoods over it. The elder of the pair, W. H. Foyle, was a lawyer's clerk, the younger, Gilbert, was ditto in a borough council office. Both, as it happens, besides looking no older than their years, at all events, are small in stature, a fact which did not help them in making good.

Both are booklovers, but neither had so much as thought of going into the book business until, having learned shorthand, they found themselves with some manuals of winged art on hand, and decided to dispose of them. They advertised the books in a paper, and got a lot more replies than they had volumes to sell. Being young men of craft, they did not disappoint their would-be customers, but proceeded to invest in more manuals of the same kind—second-hand—and resold them to their correspondents at a profit. That decided their future. The younger Foyle gave up his job in the borough council office, and took charge of the tiny shop in Peckham which was the official birthplace of their big business. They advertised shrewdly and used, from the first, a clever system of classification of books for sale and wanted which now has grown into a card-index system on American lines which covers the whole world. It was to the latter (plus intelligence and hustle which he left unmentioned) that the elder of the brothers attributed most of their success when talking with me. He adds that they now buy, on an average, 10,000 books a week.

It was not surprising to hear that both of these young captains of industry, one of whom is clean-shaven and the other of whom sprouts an immature mustache, have been mistaken frequently for their own clerks and, in their earlier days, for their own office boy.

"And that reminds me," said W. H. Foyle, "that a year or two ago, when we were probably one of the largest book firms in the kingdom, we had to carry on all our business transactions by post, as the juvenile appearance of both partners made business houses doubtful about dealing with us.

"Talking of letters, at one of our former shops our correspondence grew so rapidly that the police grew very suspicious about it. The premises were watched for some weeks, under the idea that we were a lottery or a betting business in disguise.

"We have a good deal to do with the police still, though in a different way. When books are wanted in a hurry in the criminal and law courts, it is usually our shelves that supply them. During the trial of Crippen, the American dentist, the out-of-the-way books on homeopathy, which, with their information about hyoscin, practically hanged Crippen, were got here, after the ordinary bookshops had been ransacked in vain. We had a letter of congratulation from the Lord Chief Justice over that.

"Queer customers? Well, only a few weeks ago we had a visitor called Baker, who insisted on being supplied with every book written by authors of the same name as himself. We found him over 500, and I hope he did not suffer from mental indigestion afterwards.

"Anyhow, there was some fine mixed reading in them. Bakers had written on tatting and the care of pigs, on insecticides and cabinetmaking, on gas engines and children's hymns.

"Then, some of our foreign customers are very curious. There are lots of earnest native students on the Gold Coast, for instance, who rely on us for their text-books, and whose correspondence is delightful. 'I am yours, with fond love, dearest,' is as common an ending as any."

Foyle added that he did business constantly with dealers and private bookbuyers in the United States, and said that, although he knew that big businesses were done in second-hand volumes on the other side of the Atlantic, he believes no single firm possessed as big a stock as occupies the twenty miles of shelves at their Charing Cross Road shop, and is piled in mountainous heaps in their warehouse in Shaftesbury Avenue.

BOOK CONSUMPTION BY STATES.

Some Statistics Based on the Sales of a Recent Cyclopedia—Counting Out District of Columbia, California Stands First.

Some interesting material that might be utilized in the construction of a cultural map of the United States, notes the New York Evening Post recently in an analysis of them, is contained in the circulation statistics for the latest edition of one of the leading encyclopedias now on the market. In selling this encyclopedia there has been no canvassing whatsoever. Subscribers have been obtained through advertising in newspapers and magazines. The results, in consequence, represent voluntary application only, the "element of persuasion," which is a powerful stimulus to sales in those quarters where it is employed, being eliminated. On the basis of 25,000 sets disposed of, the distribution is as follows:

In the District of Columbia, one copy of the encyclopedia has been sold for every 832 inhabitants. This ratio is extraordinarily high, being twice that for any of the States; but it is to be explained, of course, by a large demand from Government offices and diplomatic circles. It is more difficult to understand why California (and not Indiana), furthest away from the publication center, stands first among the States. One copy for every 1,663 inhabitants has already gone to the "Golden State." This may, perhaps, be accounted for by the traditional energy of her citizens, the keen rivalry with their brethren in the East, as well as their newly awakened interest in legislative affairs. In addition to this, there can be no doubt that the large leisured or semi-leisured class which has sought the favored regions of Southern California as a home has been much attracted to the work for the purpose of general reading.

New York stands second in the list, the ratio being but a little under California (1 to 1,690). Massachusetts and Connecticut are third and fourth, while the fifth place is unexpectedly held by Arizona, whose inhabitants have obtained the new reference work in the ratio of 1 to 2,700. The high intelligence of the inhabitants, brought thither by the great mining industries, and the health resorts, combined with a lack of public libraries, would account for the demand, which has exceeded that from Rhode Island, and has been far greater than that from such commonwealths as Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, and Missouri. This explanation of Arizona's interest in the Britannica is further confirmed by the fact that her sister and neighbor, New Mexico, a great stock-raising State, with a population over one-half greater, has sought the encyclopedia only to about one-third the proportionate extent.

The sale of the work throughout the mining States is significant, and must be associated in some degree with the value and extent of the mining and its related industries. Montana stands very close to Arizona (1 to 3,000) as a patron, and the book is distributed there in proportion to the population exactly as it is in Rhode Island. Colorado is only slightly below Montana (1 to 3,170), and is a considerable distance ahead of such a great population center as Illinois, with its demand of one copy for every 3,540 inhabitants. It is therefore safe to regard the mining occupations as a considerable factor in the large California sale. The States of Utah, Idaho, and Wyoming also show a large call, Idaho standing almost exactly beside wealthy Pennsylvania, where the sale-rate so far of one set to 4,450 inhabitants is surprisingly low. An exception to the mining States is Nevada, where only one out of 16,340 inhabitants has acquired the work. Oregon and Washington show a nearly equal demand, the proportion being one to 3,314 and 3,570, respectively.

The inhabitants of Maryland (1 to 3,700) exhibit much more interest than do those of Pennsylvania; but once across the Potomac the decline in sales becomes considerable. Virginia has so far taken only one set for every 8,000 of her citizens; North Carolina, one for every 13,000 (exactly as in Tennessee), with a lower ratio (1 to 14,260) in South Carolina, and a slightly higher one in Georgia (1 to 12,320), but Florida, so poor in its resources, shows a striking advance to 1 in 6,000. This must be attributed to the factor noted in the case of California—the existence of a leisured class whose residence is due to climatic conditions.

Mississippi has asked for the new work only in proportion of 1 to 19,000. This is the low mark in the South; Texas, Louisiana, Alabama, Arkansas, Kentucky, all have done much better, and the first two here mentioned hold almost as good a record as Virginia and are ahead of West Virginia, where the rate stands 1 to 9,850. Coming to Missouri, the figure takes a considerable jump (1 to 5,740), which might be expected of a State whose citizens are accredited with a propensity of wishing to be "shown;" and where this reputed mental temperament may be responsible for their taking a place practically by the side of the people of old Maine and New Hampshire and ahead of Vermont in their use for a great work of reference. One is tempted the more to place faith in this idea when a step is taken across Missouri's northern border into Iowa, where an inexplicable condition has developed. Only one in 28,500 of Iowa's inhabitants has asked for the book. The explanation of this must be left to the expert in economic science. No superficial investigation can account for the presence of Iowa at the bottom of the list so far below Mississippi, Nevada, Oklahoma (1 to 15,500), and Kansas (1 to 14,000—the equal of South Carolina). Iowa's neighbors show a relatively high demand—Minnesota, 1 to 5,300; North Dakota, 1 to 6,400; South Dakota, 1 to 7,000; Wisconsin, 1 to 7,300, and Nebraska, 1 to 9,000. Why Iowa, where conditions of life and prosperity are so nearly similar, should only have asked for this work from one-fifth to one-third the extent of the adjoining commonwealths is the most curious question that arises from a study of these cultural statistics.

SALE OF THE CRANE COLLECTION OF AMERICANA.

THE library of the late E. W. Crane, of Newark, N. J., will be sold by the George H. Richmond Literature Co. late in March. The Crane collection promises to be the last (as it is the greatest) of libraries of rare Americana to be offered at public sale in many years. The Church collection has passed into the strong hands of Henry E. Huntington, and, it may be fairly presumed, has found a permanent home; the John Carter Brown library can never come upon the market; the Lefferts' collection (many of the gems of which will be found in the Crane catalogue) has been dispersed, and the same state of affairs exists as to the Hollingsworth collection and others. Public and university libraries are fast accumulating whole collections and single rarities as they occur in the market, and in the really scarce books of all kinds a genuine famine prevails. There will be no improvement in this, for not only by absorption in permanent institutions, occasional destruction by fire and other causes, are the books disappearing, but, on the other hand, the ranks of collectors are daily growing and wealth-increasing. The price paid to-day for rare books will, within the next decade, fill the collectors' hearts with envy. Of no class of rare books is this more true than Americana. Always among the scarcest of books, early works relating to the discovery, development and history of America have, as is natural, appealed most strongly to the American buyer.

The Crane books cover the whole period of American history, from the discovery of the country to well after the Civil War. Among them will be found the letter of Christopher Columbus, printed at Rome by Planck, 1493, announcing his discoveries on the western hemisphere. It has an interesting history, having been presented to the Astor Library in 1872 by William Waldorf Astor, and afterwards sold. Fortunately, it has not been disfigured by the library stamp, and is in very fine condition. Then there is the wonderfully fine set, edited by Levinus Hulsius, recording early voyages, delightfully illustrated by quaint, but beautifully executed, copper plates. It includes the rare twenty-sixth part, which does not appear in the check list of rarities of the Church Library. This set has been described by an expert as one of the finest, if not the finest, in existence. Its value to-day is very great.

Then there is a set of the "great" voyages, edited by Theodore de Bry; another picture gallery of early Americana, also rare. Several editions of Ptolemy will be found, with their remarkable maps; the excessively rare Hakluyt of 1582; also one of three known perfect copies of "Budd's Good Order," established in New Jersey, 1685, the first book printed in America by William Bradford; a beautiful copy of Captain John Smith's "History of Virginia," 1624, is here, in the old binding. Another book of great rarity is the first edition of Wood's "New England's Prospect," 1634, with the genuine map of the same date. Very few copies are known of this issue, the title page and map being usually dated 1635. The folio Hakluyt of 1589 is not only a splendid copy, but contains a brilliant impression of the map, of which not more than a dozen are known. In a copy of the "Charters of Pennsylvania and Philadelphia," printed by Franklin in 1742, a former owner has inscribed, "Bought from Benjamin Franklin, 1743; price, £1 10 s." Several other works printed by Franklin are in the collection. Scot's "Government of the Province of East New Jersey," printed at Edinburgh in 1685, is a very rare book, and the library contains the beautiful Marshall Lefferts' copy. The lives of the "Bucaniers of America," 1684, contains all the four parts, and is a good copy. There are five editions of "Champlain's Voyages," ranging from 1616 to 1632, two of them in the original vellum. These rank among the scarcest of Americana. Mr. Crane also possessed one of the finest collections of Las Casas' "Accounts of the Cruelties of the Spaniards in the W. Indies," with all the engravings depicting the dreadful atrocities perpetrated; Roman's "Florida," with the crude, but curious, copperplates by the author, New York, 1775—a work of extreme rarity; a series of the practically unobtainable "Scottish Proprietors," tracts relating to New Jersey, issued from Edinburgh.

There are about 2000 books in all, and it will take six sessions to disperse them. The sale will be one of the most important events of the present American book season.

FREE ENTRY OF BOOKS TO INDIVIDUALS.

The clause of the tariff act of 1909 (Paragraph 517) referring to the free entry of books published by individuals for gratuitous distribution, came up for elucidation in a recent case before the United States Court of Customs Appeals:

Montgomery, presiding judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

The importation in question in this case consists of books published by the Badische Anilin & Soda-Fabrik, a corporation engaged in the manufacture and sale of colors and dyestuffs. They were assessed for duty under the general provisions for books in Paragraph 416 of the tariff act of 1909. The importers protested and claimed that the books were entitled to free entry as "publications of individuals for gratuitous private circulation" under Paragraph 517 of said act.

Paragraph 517, in full, reads as follows:

> Books, maps, music, engravings, photographs, etchings, bound or unbound, and charts, which shall have been printed more than twenty years at the date of importation, and all hydrographic charts, and publications issued for their subscribers or exchanges by scientific and literary associations or academies, or publications of individuals for gratuitous private circulation, and public documents issued by foreign governments.

The board sustained the protest and held the publication entitled to free entry. The government subsequently made an application for a rehearing, which was denied, and this appeal was taken to review the two decisions of the board.

Testimony of the importers, which is uncontradicted, was offered by a member of the importing firm, who testified that the English translation of the title of the books would be "'Pocket Guide of Scientific Books,' which we give away to dyers, for dyers or users of dyes, to schools that make a specialty of preparing dyes, such as the Lowell Textile School, to colleges, and so on." It also appeared that the publishers of the books were dealers in dyes and chemicals, and were sellers of the dyestuffs listed in the book.

The board was of the opinion that these books were of the class intended for gratuitous private circulation within the meaning of Paragraph 17, and relied for this ruling upon the case of Schieffelin v. United States (84 Fed., 880).

In view of the history of that case, we do not see how the conclusion reached by the Board of General Appraisers can be well avoided. Paragraph 410 of the act of August 27, 1894, provided for the admission free of duty of "publications issued for their subscribers by scientific and literary associations or academies, or publications of individuals for gratuitous private circulation and public documents issued by foreign governments." This provision came before the Circuit Court of Appeals in the case cited, and it appeared that the publication, claimed to be the publication of individuals for private circulation, was a book treating of various subjects relating to Norway, its fishermen and fisheries, its customs, to Moller's Cod-Liver Oil, and containing some matter of scientific research original with the author. It was published not for general circulation or for sale, but for gratuitous distribution to such selected persons, principally physicians and others who might become interested in Moller's Cod-Liver Oil, as should be designated by the publisher or his friends. This was held to be free of duty under the paragraph quoted. It was stated:

> The publisher doubtless expected by its distribution to promote the sale of his cod-liver oil by enlightening those who might read it in regard to the valuable properties of that article.
> This circumstance, however, is not material. The books were imported for gratuitous private circulation, and, if this was done in the effort to accomplish some ulterior object of interest to the publisher, the statute does not condemn it or make it in any sense a test of the dutiable character of the books.

The present publication is in all essentials similar to that there under consideration, and with this decision before it, and attention having been drawn to it in the "Notes on Tariff Revision" (pages 670, 671), Congress re-enacted this portion of the paragraph in the terms employed in the act of 1894. This is a legislative recognition of the judicial interpretation previously given to the enactment.

But it is urged in this case, as a reason why the books are not entitled to free entry, that the publication is limited to publications of an individual, and it is pointed out that the word "individual" is sometimes construed to mean a single person, as a man or woman. Yet numerous decisions have been given, and are referred to in the brief of the government, in which the word "individual" used in the statute has been held to include corporations and partnerships, as, for instance, a

Massachusetts statute which provided that no abatement should be made of the taxes assessed on any individual until he should have filed a list under oath, was held to have included under the term individual both natural persons and corporations. Otis v. Inhabitants of Ware (74 Mass., 509).

So, in construing a statute of Mississippi, which levied an ad valorem tax of one-fourth of one per cent. on all money loaned on interest by individuals, it was held that the term included natural persons and foreign banks or corporations, as distinguished from banks incorporated under the laws of Mississippi.

This is a case which we think strongly in point here, as it would seem that the word "individuals" here employed was used to distinguish between the classes entitled to introduce their publications free. This brief paragraph provides for three classes of publications—publications issued for their subscribers or exchanges by scientific and literary associations or academies, public documents issued by foreign governments, and publications of individuals intended for gratuitous private circulation. It seems reasonably clear that the word "individuals" as here employed was intended to differentiate between publications of those other than literary associations or academies and of foreign governments, and to include under the term individuals all others. Other cases might be cited.

The subject is summed up in 22 Cyc., 494, under the term "individual," where, after citing that as a noun it means one distinct being, a single one, and when spoken of the human kind it means one man or one woman, the paragraph concludes: "As used in statutes relative to taxation, the term applies equally to corporations and individuals."

We think this contention of the government should be overruled. The decision of the board is affirmed.

WHAT NOVELS?

Pungent Comments by a Librarian on Some Typical Recent Fiction.

Don't put into your library a novel that the majority of the community think ethically rotten. On the other hand, don't hesitate to put in one that a few people think demoralizing. Remember that George Eliot was once considered morally harmful and Trilby was called obscene!

Avoid novels (a) that make a direct appeal to the lower nature. Here I would include novels written to pander to race prejudice and hatred, such as some of Dixon's, novels that glorify the lust for wealth and those that enthrone the animal over the spiritual nature, setting passion above principle, even to the point of exalting passion into a rule of life. (b) That confuse right and wrong, blurring our ethical vision. Mrs. Ward does this in "Marriage a la Mode" when she scores her heroine for refusing to stay with and bear children to a man who did not love her, who married her for her money and who hadn't backbone enough to keep him out of dissipation when she left him. Daphne parted from her husband for selfish reasons, but she should have left him for other reasons, and Mrs. Ward falls down badly when she uses this particular situation as an argument against divorce. Some people would class Tinayre's "Shadow of Love" here, arguing that the heroine's fall is glossed over and made little of. (c) That are so slushy that they are intellectually and ethically debilitating. Barclay's "Through the Postern Gate" is a good example of this spineless literature of warm and damp affection. It oozes love on every page—the love of a middle-aged woman for a boy whom she finally marries. (d) That are untrue to life through an impossible psychology, or one-sidedness, or morbidness. Nesbitt's "House with No Address" is a good example of the last, Chambers' "Common Law," of the first. Michaelis' "Dangerous Age" is one of the novels that seem to me untrue to life, for the reason that the author has taken a type of the middle-aged woman, a woman who married without love and never bore a child, who was from the beginning shallow, selfish and over-emotional. That woman exists. We all know her. But she is not the norm for the woman of forty-five.

Shall we have in our libraries novels on as low a literary level as those of Rosa Nouchette Carey and Clara Louise Burnham? Why not, if people want them? They are fairly well written, not so mushy as Barclay's later novels or many others that might be mentioned, and ethically superior to Chambers or Hichens.

What about Porter's "Harvester"? Put it in by all means and duplicate it freely. It is silly in spots and over-sentimental, but this is balanced by its wholesome attitude towards out-of-doors and towards money-getting as the chief end of existence. Of course, it is not literature.

Here comes Robert Chambers, whose novels are of a much higher grade of literary workmanship, with his "Common Law." Shall we add that? Now, that the hue and cry is over, and we all have decided for or against the book, suppose we try to state calmly some reasons for its exclusion from our library shelves. Its insincerity and vulgarity form a sufficient reason. In speaking of its vulgarity I am not finding fault with the opening chapter describing Valerie's first experience as a model—that was done with decency and restraint,—but with the atmosphere of the book as a whole. Valerie is a psychological monstrosity. The girl Chambers assures us, that she is, could not have done the things that Chambers assures us she did. He tried to write a novel at once sufficiently risque to catch one class of readers and sufficiently proper to attract another class. This is as difficult a feat as it would be to advocate simultaneously the candidacy of both Taft and Roosevelt. Mr. Chambers' art suffered in the attempt.

Yet there are readers who call Valerie a "sweet girl," who find no fault with Mr. Chambers' ethics, but whose individual hairs (at least such of them as are rooted in their own heads) would stand on end at the thought of having Kauffman's "House of Bondage" in the public library.

"The House of Bondage" is horrible. So is a surgical operation. But it never confuses moral issues nor describes evil for the sake of rolling it as a sweet morsel under the tongue.

It is a clean-cut, unsentimental picture, drawn with the restraint of art, of conditions that are poisoning our civilization. It is a powerful tract rather than a novel. Perhaps the word tract is a misnomer, for Kauffman does no direct preaching. He lets the facts preach. It is not a book for young boys and girls who lead sheltered lives. It is a book for young people exposed to the dangers of which it treats, and for all adults. Here, then, is a book whose subject matter is loathsome, but whose trend is distinctly ethical. No one can read it and doubt that the wages of sin is death.

It cannot be repeated too often that morality is a question of treatment rather than of subject-matter, and that the knowledge of disagreeable facts is often necessary, and cannot harm us if we keep fast hold on spiritual values. Vachell's recent novel, "Blinds Down," is a telling account of what is likely to happen when one denies the existence of the unsavory facts of life.

The novel that degrades our intellect, vulgarizes our emotions, kills our faith in people, is an immoral book; the novel that stimulates thought, quickens our sense of humor, gives us a deeper insight into men and women, a finer sympathy with them, and arouses a spirit of helpfulness towards them, is a moral book, let its subject-matter have as wide a range as life itself.

But what about the girl of sixteen? The sixteen-year-old girl who reads the newspapers and popular magazines and sees modern plays has not much left to learn of the shady side of life. In any case, libraries are for men and women as well as children. Nor should the entire responsibility of what the girl reads be put upon the shoulders of the librarian. The girl's mother should take at least as much interest in the style of book her daughter reads as in the style of gown she wears.

Select your fiction then, with care, but don't shut out novels either because they fail to reach a certain literary level or because their subject-matter is disagreeable. Get as many copies as you can of the interesting, wholesome stories of the day, such as "Stover at Yale" and "The Squirrel Cage." Wait for results and don't worry in the meantime.—CORINNE BACON, in Public Libraries.

FRENCH PUBLISHING METHODS AS SEEN BY AN ENGLISH AUTHOR.

By W. L. GEORGE.

I DO not, in this article,* give the exhaustive details of French publishing methods which some may hope to find in it, partly because the facts are jealousy guarded, and partly because they are not, as facts, interesting to British authors. Our almost invariable method is to sell foreign rights for a lump sum, and I do not think that a perusal of the following notes will induce any English or American writer to depart from the practice. My main object is to compare literary conditions in two countries with reference to the circulating library, of which it may almost be said that it does not exist in France. It is because I look upon the circulating library as a useful and beneficial link between author and reader that I ask my fellow authors to consider the régime under which books are issued in France.

Broadly speaking, it may be said that in France many writers who have made a name, and all the new writers, must, if they wish to attain publication, lay down the cost of the first edition. For 1000 copies of a novel (paper bound) at 70 cents* nominal, this amounts to $180 to $240.† The book is sold to the public at 65 cents, by a few enterprising booksellers at 60 cents. The division of the selling price is approximately as follows:

Cost of the book.....	about	.20 .20
Bookseller's discount.....	"	.20 .20
Publisher's commission.....	"	.07 to .14
Author's profit.....	"	.16 to .09

In a few cases the publisher charges the author a small fee for warehousing, also postages on copies sold, but this is not usual among the best firms. Advertisements, if any, are, however, paid for by the author.

These terms must not be taken as rigid; they are subject to variation from firm to firm, and are greatly influenced when the publisher controls a printing office; in those cases he often supplies the books at a little over cost price, which may save the author four cents a copy. They are not, however, unusual terms, and show that the author must sell a considerable proportion of his first edition before he begins to make profits. For instance, when the publisher makes the minimum charge of seven cents, the author must sell 55 per cent. of an edition of 1000 copies to clear expenses, after which he makes 36 cents a copy clear profit; in the second case, he must sell nearly 70 per cent. before he begins to earn 29 cents a copy. The author's profits are a little larger on dearer books, published at $1 and $1.50, for the cost of production is not much greater.

It may appear surprising that the cost of production should be twenty cents a copy, but it must be borne in mind that I refer exclusively to new books, of which very small editions are printed in the first instance. Few "first books" appear in first editions of over 1000; 500 is a common figure, while 200 is not unknown. This, and the high cost of paper (more or less trust-controlled) makes it difficult to bring the cost down. I may, therefore, point out, in passing, that we must not too readily be impressed when offered a French book for translation; twenty-third edition may mean 100,000 copies, but it may mean 10,000 to 15,000.

† French novels are seldom bound in the first instance; the paper "yellow cover" is the rule. The author, therefore, benefits slightly when copies go to pieces, but this advantage must not be exaggerated, for well-to-do householders willingly fill their libraries with novels broken up into two or three segments.

When a book is issued at publisher's risk, and I repeat that "first books" are not often taken upon these terms, it frequently happens that the book is sold outright, and it is significant that several of Zola's early works, of which I understand "L'Assommoir" was one, were sold for $400. Where the publisher grants a royalty he pays 7 cents to 14 cents a copy, but 14 cents is a large royalty, which was paid Zola, and is to-day given only to the most popular novelists. These are, in my opinion, very bad terms, and they are not offset by particularly large sales; it is true that Zola repeatedly attained 200,000, but Mirbeau, Bourget, Prévost, Anatole France have not yet touched this figure. They may earn $5000 to $15,000 a book, which does not compare very favorably with the $37,500 which an English author may earn on a 100,000 sale. French sales are not large; the figures I have quoted apply to a few favored books, and they are not greatly exceeded by those of detective fiction; but the newcomer, however brilliant, very seldom attains them. It is true that about 90,000 copies of "Marie Claire" have, so far, been sold, but it is also lamentably true that "a new author, who has sold 1000 copies, has not done badly and is a rising man." That statement was made to me by a French publisher, and, it seems to me, proves that the career of letters does not in France carry great material rewards.

The newcomer is, therefore, not dissatisfied if he makes $150 to $200 on a first novel; thus only can he become known and hope to begin to reprint his earlier works. There is nothing to help him, for the buying public of France is no larger than our own, while it is both avaricious and poor; it buys if it must, and it has of late years been corrupted by reprints at 19, 13, 12, 8 and 6 cents. The Frenchman, equally with the Englishman, will pay for two stalls at the theatre, but he does not readily part with 65 cents for a book; he buys as little as he can, and assiduously exchanges books with his friends, thus constituting a small circulating library, but he does not buy from the newcomer; that one must fight his way into success by repeated failure and loss, by journalistic prowess, by scandal or length of time, before the buying public takes him to its heart. The French do not, I think, read as much as the English; their railway carriages and restaurants are filled with people who read, not the equivalents of Temple Classics or Sevenpennies, but newspapers.

With such a system as this it is not wonderful that new authors are crushed out, fleeced of their capital or driven into journalism. There are no circulating libraries to help them, that is, no great organizations to which well-to-do households subscribe as automatically as they order coal. The "Cabinet de Lecture" is not the splendid British institution, which so recklessly orders thirteen copies of a first book and several hundreds of a favorite; the Cabinet de Lecture is, as a rule, a wretched shop kept by an elderly spinster; it charges "so much a book," generally 2 to 5 cents for four days; it buys one Marcel Prévost, two or three under popular pressure; it buys one copy of certain reviews, and remainders and the derelicts in second-hand bookshops! As for the new writer, the publisher's traveler knows better than to waste time over him; the Cabinet de Lecture will buy his work only if pestered by ten subscribers. There are in Paris two or three fairly large Cabinets, but they are interested mainly in science, philosophy and artistic theory; their purchases are not liberal, and their membership is small. I questioned a number of well-to-do persons, who informed me that they did not belong to a library, and that they knew very few people who did. Beyond Paris is literary emptiness; Versailles, 55,000 inhabitants, equivalent to Lincoln or Oxford, is said to have three Cabinets; I expect there are twenty in Lincoln; a reliable informant told me that in Bordeaux, 250,000 inhabitants, the principal Cabinet was not likely to have purchased more than ten copies of "Les Dieux ont Soif," by Anatole France. That is an amazing statement, for it means that Mudie's bought more of this foreigner's book than the biggest Cabinet of a French town equivalent to Leicester or Nottingham. The object of the Cabinet is to level the demand, to prevent the public from having what it wants by trebling the reading fee; it might, for instance, charge 10 cents for two days in the case of "Les Dieux ont Soif," so as to force its members to take "something of our own." In other words, the fraud of the label.

The upshot of this inquiry is, therefore, that there are two sides to the library question. In France, where the people are poor and incredibly inhospitable and mean, it is clear to me that the literary profession is gravely hampered by the lack of libraries; the libraries alone can help the young writer, in a country where books are not reviewed. There is practically no book reviewing in France; let it not be urged against me that there are reviews in the Revue de Paris, the Mercure, the Revue des Deux-Mondes, etc., for these deal mainly with "serious books," and are inclined to favor their own publishing houses; nor must the objector lay stress on the poor scraps of space granted on certain days by Le Temps, Le Matin, L'Excelsior, etc. There is not a single newspaper in Paris which can put forward a service to literature equal to the minimum ten columns a week of the Daily News, the full pages of the Morning Post and Daily Telegraph, the column of the Daily Chronicle.

The new writer is, in France, absolutely helpless. Because there are no circulating libraries, he has nothing before him but a desperate struggle; this would be our fate also if we could not sell half our first editions to the libraries. It may be said that, if there were in France a demand for libraries, the libraries would arise; that I cannot answer, but the French are cautious speculators, and it may be that the project has often been considered and abandoned. Personally, I do not think that a large circulating library would succeed in Paris; two-thirds of my life have been spent in that city, and I am not sure that there are many Parisians prepared to lay down for books even so small an annual sum as a guinea. The French have been grossly overrated by the British; if we exclude the intellectuals there is nothing to show that the great bourgeoisie is one whit more liberal or cultured than our own. It is perfectly well contented with social intercourse as an alternative to reading, and is taking to its heart the illustrated press; it is given over to sensationalism, which is abundantly provided by the dailies, and it is not in the main inclined to accord its literary men a treatment much superior to that enjoyed by its bank clerks.

THE COLONIAL BOOK TRADE.

THE BOOK MARKET IN CANADA, AS THE ENGLISH AUTHOR VIEWS IT.

ONE is frequently asked why the Dominion is not a more lucrative field for British publishers, and a suggestion has often been made, and is being continually reiterated, that were the British publisher to make a greater effort the result would be sure to show. If Canada were, say, as near to London as is France, its English speaking people would make a very acceptable extra five or six million feeders to the London market and London book-travelers. Canadians would then be English, pure and simple. They would read reviews of British books on their journey to town of a morning, and the latest sevenpenny shocker or shilling educator on their return in the evenings. Their tastes would be British, their wives probably daughters or granddaughters of Britons, they would be in close touch with the habits, tastes and customs of Britons, and would recognize the allusions to British politics and understand British slang and every-day expressions. They would be familiar with the heft of a book printed on English featherweight, esparto paper, and would not know that the backs broke or the covers warped when subjected to a different climate. In the illustrations they would recognize a people with whom they were acquainted in an environment such as they had often visited on trips either of business or pleasure. Let us now boldly transport this across-the-Channel-Canada to a continent, the nearest point of which shall be 3,000 miles from Land's End, and remember that in the ages necessary for making this change of locality the people will not be able to run over to London for Easter and Whitsuntide, they will indeed largely forget the holiday instinct, they will have to be self-sustaining from their own land, and it will be a land that is not blessed with a climate resulting from an ever-running Gulf Stream. They will have no time or money to ride to hounds for instance. Even if they had, the necessity of demarking their boundaries with wire instead of hawthorn would effectually prevent a continuance of the sport, not to mention an array of "embattled farmers" with shot guns determined to protect their growing crops. This illustration alone, perhaps, will show how in the course of time a fox-hunting novel, while interesting to a few Canadian readers, will not be convincing to the many.

Let us imagine this Canada now firmly planted on the northern half of this new continent and separated only by an imaginary line from a very prosperous country containing a population twelve times as numerous. Let us remember that this line is so imaginary that on its 3,000 miles of length at one time and another there have been most bitter controversies as to just where it shall and does run. It is so imaginary that the young people from the north, in times of stress, poured over without hindrance to the south, and moneyed men from the south poured over to the north later on with money to exploit the natural riches of the country, or others to take up free land for farming after their own was used up or became too expensive to buy.

The younger men of both nations very probably married each other's sisters and, speaking of the case of Canadians in the States, it is only natural that they should adopt the manners and customs of the country of their adoption. These expatriated Canadians wrote home of their life in the States, they sent papers, they came home to visit with their pockets and bags full of American magazines that they read on the train. In a thousand ways the continual intercourse of two peoples who are ever joining hands, even if only in business, will be bound to tend toward making them similarly minded. The climate demands that Canadians shall dress much the same as Americans. The American fashion-plates set the style for ninety million people and, since the clothing of Englishmen is not suited as a rule to Canadian needs, it is perfectly natural that the Canadian shall take the American style as the basis of his own and cut his cloth accordingly. Therefore we see young Canada often making himself absurd in the ultra-padded shoulders and the ridiculous trousers of the American, not because that particular fashion is better suited to Canadian climatic conditions than clothes of an English cut, but because as a general rule all the necessities of life, clothes and food, and everything else are alike both sides of the line, and for both countries better suited than what best fits the Englishman.

What is true in bodily necessities is also true as to the mental pabulum of the two North American people. The United States is rich in ephemeral literature—the illustrated daily, the weekly farm paper, which tells how best to grow crops in the western continent, the monthly magazines, which expose trusts operating in both countries, which tell in the most attractive manner stories of a daily life known equally well to readers of both nations, their pages embellished with portraits of actors, and more especially actresses, who are to be seen successively in New York, Boston, Montreal, Toronto, Buffalo, Chicago, and Winnipeg. What shall we say of the many "Home" journals? "The foot that rocks the cradle rules the world." To mix metaphors—while one foot is rocking the cradle the other is reading how to clothe the mite in the cradle or the older boys and girls who, the full-page advertisements assert, should be habited like the grown up little American people in the fashion section, or should be fed on Somebody's Oats or puffed rice, or shredded corn, or some other everyday commodity packed in a jar or bottle or a carton by some large American advertiser with a be-sure-you-ask-for-and-insist-on-getting t a g on every advertisement, which in the long run means the adoption of that article in thousands of Canadian households, and therefore food shops.

It may be said that this has nothing to do with the book market in Canada. Perhaps not directly, but it is used here to illustrate the argument that it is only natural that for everything mental and physical the smaller people will go for supplies to their larger and, moreover, next-door neighbor. Let us grant, then, that food and clothing are not germane to the subject of this article, and let us examine particularly the American novel in its attraction to Canadian readers. We have seen that in fashions of habiliment there is in Canadians a distinct leaning towards those of the United States. This is also true in the house furnishing, and none the less true in the raiment of books. The American publisher knows his public, and gives it a novel in a cover embellished with as much color and gold as the cost of manufacture and the royalty will stand. The book is wrapped in a jacket generally with a design wholly different from that stamped on the cover. It is more often than not a three-color reproduction of a painting specially drawn by a high-priced, well-known artist. Very often the engaging young female on the jacket is so little like the heroine inside the book, as one conceives her to be, that the effect is ludicrous; nevertheless the jacket was intended to sell the book and, having accomplished its end, if the story is entertaining the incongruity of the "bait" is forgotten or overlooked. This bright-colored jacket performs another very important function. In Canada, as in the States, novels are sold, not lent, and the picture jacket is an invaluable aid to the bookseller in dressing his window and to him and the department stores in making counter displays. The publisher often lends a quantity of books for this purpose. To be sure the number of public libraries is increasing, but what goes to the libraries is an inconsiderable factor compared with the quantity purchased by individuals. As long as the book is a "new novel," it lies about the house in its jacket until a newer one takes its place, at which time the jacket is removed and the book takes its place in the bookcase, its bright cloth and decorative design lending a brightness to the room.

All this is written not at all with the idea of urging the universal adoption of American book fashions, but merely to show what has obtained, and does obtain, notwithstanding the expressed determination of many American publishers from time to time to break away from the fashion. The difficulty of "belling the cat" may be overcome eventually through the ever-increasing cost of manufacture and the reduction in the retail price of the book. In Great Britain, where the sale of a novel to individuals is insignificant, the jacket is an unnecessary expense, and the cover cloth must be of sombre hue to hide the result of much library handling, which would be fatal to its gaudy American cousin. As a rule, an English novel is bought by a Canadian publisher in sheets, and either in London or Toronto put into a cover and jacket which shall make it as "attractive," from the travelers' and booksellers' point of view as the American ones in the salesman's sample trunk.

Probably enough has been said about the competition from American authors and publishers, and it might not be out of place to analyze the British novel as a whole and see why it often fails to appeal to the Canadian reader. Aside from the ignorance of conditions of life in the old land, and one might say often his lack of interest in it, the Canadian finds himself frequently unable to pick his way through long political or theological discussions or allusions to either subject in English novels, which are bound to take the edge off his interest. Some of the reasons for the failure of English books to "take" in Canada are very subtle. For instance, a publisher inquired why it was impossible to sell in Canada a very important work just published in England. He should surely have learned before publication, and not afterwards, that while in England the pharmacopœia used is Greek, in Canada doctors and chemists use the American pharmacopœia, which is Latin.

OFFSET PRINTING.

A Brief Description in Form that the Layman Can Understand.

Offset printing, says the Inland Printer, might now be called the new art in printing. Through the selling efforts of the makers of offset presses, printers generally have had their attention arrested by this comparatively new art—new, because it is only very recently that the art has been simplified and improved so that the average printer can consider the advisability of utilizing it.

What is offset printing? Every printer knows what offset on a job is—an evil that must not be allowed in a print shop. But it was found that if the principles producing the destructive offset were rightly followed out, the same could be used for creative work.

Like almost everything else that has changed the old way of doing things, the beginning was the result of a blunder or accident, or both.

Digitized by Google

As I understand it, the combination of circumstances that started the offset development was about as follows:

An old cylinder press, doing cheap work with a rubber tympan;

A careless feeder;

A pressman with an inventive turn of mind.

The pressman observed that the offset (caused by frequently missed sheets) looked better on the back than the job did on the face. Everybody doing offset work now knows it does, if the stock, form and ink are right. These essentials just happened to be right when the inquiring pressman observed it.

Of course, the print read backwards. To utilize the idea practically, the form should read the reverse of the ordinary type form. I noticed in the last issue of Barnhardt Brothers and Spindler's catalogue that there are a few founts of type shown called offset type, the face of the letter reading the reverse of ordinary type. I will not say now that the time will come when typefounders will cut all their letters for offset printing, as well as for direct type printing. No one can tell what the final outcome of the new art will be. The reading of the form could be reversed by photography and the zinc-etching process to bring the letters in relief.

But lithographic presses did not use type in relief. A "transfer" was made to stone. To-day, practically all of offset printing is done by means of methods evolved from the principles of lithography.

For the benefit of the printer apprentice (and the good trade journal should keep him ever in mind), we will go into the A B C of lithography. Lithography is possible only because of the fact that oil and water will not mix. All lithographing presses have cloth-covered rollers for dampening the stone and skin-covered rollers for inking the transfer. The moisture adheres to the stone wherever there is no ink. The transfer, being covered by an oily ink, does not take the moisture from the dampening rollers. When the form passes under the inking rollers the ink will not adhere to the moist parts of the stone, and adheres only to the oily surfaces of the transfer, thus producing a clean print without the use of type or lines in relief. When a transfer is made for offset purposes, the transfer is reversed, so that it will print right. Most offset presses to-day are of the rotary principle. The form, or, more properly speaking, the plate with the properly prepared transfer, is put on a cylinder. I understand that attempts have been made to make a curved stone. It would work, but the expense of the stone and the machine construction needed to carry the stone were much more, and not any more efficient, than the zinc plates now used.

At first, aluminium was used, and it worked satisfactorily. It is said that an experimenter who was out of aluminium tried zinc, and now everybody is using it. Zinc, ungrained, will not do so well as stone in the matter of dampening. Graining the zinc gives it the necessary tackiness so that it would hold the moisture. To grain a sheet of zinc it is placed in a "grainer," a machine of very simple construction, consisting of a wooden tray, which is given a horizontal "jigging" motion. On the top of the zinc to be grained in the grainer are placed a lot of marbles. These marbles rattle around on the zinc and produce the graining.

Good lithograph stone is becoming scarcer and scarcer and more expensive, and the discovery that, for offset printing, zinc was better than stone was of great value.

A common method to make transfers of type forms for offset work is to take a perfectly printed copy made on transfer paper with transfer ink on a modern printers' proof press or job press, then lay the printed transfer face down on the zinc and transfer the heavy pressure to the zinc. The transfer paper is then soaked off the zinc with water, leaving the ink on the zinc. The zinc is then dampened and inked by hand and examined to see that all details are brought out. An offset proof press is now on the market to enable a proof to be taken from the transfer without the expense of putting it on a regular press. This machine will also be useful for print reversing, and will do away with the use of transfer paper in many cases.

In transferring delicately lined cuts and engravings, it has been found that a direct transfer by photography to the zinc gives the best results. The zinc is sensitized and the negative put in close contact with the sensitized surface of the zinc, and exposed to electric light. The zinc is "developed" in a chemical solution. The developed image will take ink, but not moisture, and will work like an ink transfer. These photograph transfers are now being made for the trade by specialists, who call the work photo-lithography. I do not think this is a good name, for "litho" means stone, and the process has nothing whatsoever to do with stone. Here is a chance for word-coiners to make a new word that will be more appropriate, in its derivative meaning, for the new art.

With the development of offset printing, the making of photo transfers may become as much of a specialized industry as the making of half-tones is to-day.

The offset printing press is even now a comparatively simple machine. It consists of three cylinders—one for the zinc, one for the rubber blanket, and one for the impression. Most of them have automatic feed, either attached to or a part of the machine.

There are no intricate mechanisms in the functions needed to print by offset. The ink rollers are made the same as rollers for lithography, consisting of a wooden or metal core covered with a skin. It is even now difficult to get good skins for making the rollers. As near as I can find, there are less than one thousand offset presses in use in this country. If the use of offset presses should increase so as to approximate the number of printing presses, inventive genius will surely find something better for offset rollers, as was found in zinc for use in place of lithographic stone.

One of the best-known makers of rubber blankets told me that the best offset blanket was not made in this country, but was imported. This offers another opportunity for Yankee ingenuity to get busy.

Offset printing was not a commercial success until ink makers gave it their especial attention and produced a good black for offset purposes, and paper makers produced papers that were especially adapted to offset work. Papers called offset papers are now generally sold by dealers. It has only been recently that suitable inks and papers have geen generally available for offset printers.

Each new advance in one art brings out advances in all the other allied arts. Photography and printing have been closely allied during the last fifteen years by the art of photo-engraving, and both arts have advanced together.

Lithography and printing from relief (type, etc.) have been competitive to a degree. But the introduction of photo-engraving, as an aid to printing, lessened the field for the uses of the principles of lithography. Now the principles of lithography have increased usefulness through the requirements of offset printing. The principles of lithography, photography and printing are now more closely bound together in the evolution of the art of offset printing.

BOOKS IMPORTED FOR GIFTS.

Copies of a book imported for the author and intended for him for gifts to professors of universities, assessed as printed matter under Paragraph 416, tariff act of 1909, were claimed to be exempt from duty as "publications of individuals for gratuitous private circulation" (Paragraph 517). Held that the fact that the publication is for sale generally excludes the books in question from the exemption provided for in Paragraph 517.—T. D., 33145. (Fischer, G. A.)

A POETRY BOOKSHOP.

Harold Monro, an enterprising enthusiast, has opened a "poetry bookshop" in Devonshire Street, London. Its proprietor is himself the author of two or three volumes of poetry, of sufficiently high quality to be laid under tribute by "Q." in his recent Oxford anthology. He is also editor of a monthly publication, formerly known as The Poetry Review, and now called Poetry and Drama. The bookstore occupies the ground floor of a quaint eighteenth-century house in a commonplace street, not far from the British Museum. Within this store will be found for sale copies of the works of major and minor poets alike. Customers who are on the lookout for poetry of any particular class will be invited to state their preferences, and a clerk will do his best to suit them. But Mr. Monro does not intend to stop at selling poetry. He has made up his mind to "boom" it in other ways. Twice a week there will be a recital at which young poets will read their own and other people's poetry aloud to anyone who cares to listen. Prof. Henry Newbolt, in formally opening the building, a few days ago, laid great stress upon the value of these recitals. Lastly, to complete the dedication of the whole building to the Muse, Mr. Monro has furnished the top of the house to provide lodgings for young poets who may be looking for simple and inexpensive housing in London.

OBITUARY NOTES.

George Louis Becke, the Australasian sailor-novelist, died at Sydney on February 18, at the age of 65. Mr. Becke was a writer of popular sea tales, who had lived the life he described in many of his works. He was born at Port Macquarie, New South Wales, in 1848, the son of Frederick Becke, a native of Northampton, England. He sailed the South Seas from 1870 to 1893, retiring in the latter year to become a writer. His first book, "By Reef and Palm," was published in 1894. His other works were: "The Ebbing of the Tide," 1896; "His Native Wife," 1896; (with Walter Jeffery) "A First Fleet Family," 1897; "Ridan the Devil"; "Naval Pioneers of Australia" (with Jeffery); "Rodman the Boatsteerer"; "The Mutineer" (with Jeffery); "Old Convict Days" (edited by), 1899; "Admiral Phillip" (with Jeffery), 1899; "Tom Wallis," 1900; "Edward Barry"; "The Tapu of Banderah" (with Jeffery); "Tessa, the Trader's Wife"; "By Rock and Pool"; "Breachley, Black Sheep"; "Yorke the Adventurer," 1901; "The Strange Adventures of James Shervinton"; "The Jalasco Brig," 1902; "Helen Adair"; "Chinkie's Flat," 1903: "Tom Gerrard," 1904; "Notes from My South Sea Log," 1905; "Sketches From Normandy," 1906.

"Joaquin" Miller, known as the "Poet of the Sierras," died on February 17, at his home in the Piedmont foothills. His daughter Juanita and his wife were with him. He had been in failing health for two years and unconscious for four days.

Cincinnatus Heine Miller, the real name of the "Poet of the Sierras," was born in Indiana, in 1841. In his early manhood he labored in the California gold mines, and in 1855 he volunteered for the filibustering expedition into Nicaragua, led by Walker. For several years he lived among the Indians on the Pacific coast. After editing a paper called the Democratic Register, in Eugene, Ore., which was suppressed on account of its disunion sentiments, the practice of law in Canon City led him into a judgeship, and until 1870 he was County Judge of Grant County.

At that time he went to the East, and crossing to England, published, in London, his "Songs of the Sierras," which made him there a literary lion. Since 1887 he had made his home in Oakland, although he visited Alaska in the Klondike days, and was while there correspondent of the New York Journal.

Among Mr. Miller's published works were "Songs of the Sierras," "Songs of Far-Away Lands," "First Families of the Sierras," "Pacific Palms," "Songs of the Sunland," "Memorie and Rime," "Baroness of New York," "The One Fair Woman," "The Destruction of Gotham," "The Ship of the Desert," "Shadows of Shasta," "Life Among the Modocs," "The Building of the City Beautiful," "Gold Seekers of the Sierras," "Chants for the Boer" (1900), "True Bear Stories" (1900), and the plays—"The Danites of the Sierras," "'49," "The Silent Man," "Tally-Ho." He was a member of the National Institute of Arts and Letters.

BOOKTRADE ASSOCIATIONS.

BOOKSELLERS' SCHOOL FEBRUARY MEETING.

The next session of the Booksellers' School will be held at one o'clock on Tuesday, February 25, at the Liberal Club, 132 East 19th Street. The address upon this occasion will probably be of the greatest practical benefit. The speaker will be Ernest Eisele, manager of the foreign department of Brentano's, who possesses, besides his wide experience in bookselling in this country, an intimate acquaintance with the system pursued on the Continent. He has made a special study of the training of booksellers' assistants in France and Germany, and the success of our enterprise is largely due to his efforts. Mr. Eisele will speak on "Some Methods of Selling in Foreign Bookstores," and it will be his purpose to show their possible application to our own problems. In every sense it will be a practical talk, which will open the way for a most interesting discussion to follow. The committee most earnestly requests a large attendance of the members and their friends. In view of the repeated suggestions that the hour of our meeting should be changed to the evening instead of one o'clock, members are requested to write postcards to the chairman of the committee, stating which hour they prefer. The question will be decided according to the wish of the majority. Besides opinions as to the hour, the committee would welcome criticisms and suggestions.

BOSTON BOOKSELLERS' LEAGUE.

The first annual evening meeting of the Boston Booksellers' League was held Monday, February 17, at the American House. The invitations called this a "get-together" time for employer and employee. About one hundred and fifty guests, including many ladies, filled the beautiful banquet hall of this famous old hostelry. Frederick Melcher, of the Charles E. Lauriat Co., as president of the league, acted as toastmaster. Seated with him at the platform table, aside from the guests, were the members of the committee, C. E. Lauriat, Jr., of the C. E. Lauriat Co.; W. B. Clarke, of W. B. Clarke Co.; Joseph Jennings, of the Old Corner Book Store; and H. V. Meyer, of the American Baptist Publication Society. Frederick A. Stokes was the first speaker, and read a very able paper on co-operation, which we hope to reprint later in the Publishers' Weekly. R. L. O'Brien, editor of the Boston Herald, commented on the present-day encroachment of the newspaper upon the field formerly monopolized by books, and pointed out the necessity, with the great amount of book publishing to-day, of constant weeding out of books of questionable and temporary value, and of keeping up to date in the matter of book selection. Perry Walton, of the Walton Advertising Co., spoke of the essentials of successful advertising, and urged the adoption of newer methods of publicity in the book business; imagination, courage, persistence and judgment, he said, are the four qualities needed. Benjamin Ticknor, of the Houghton Mifflin Co., spoke briefly on "The Making of a Best Seller," relating the story of the promotion of "Queed." The officers of the league are: President, Frederick G. Melcher; secretary, H. V. Meyer; treasurer, Sol. Abbot.

NEW YORK BOOKSELLERS' LEAGUE.

The annual banquet and ladies' night of the Booksellers' League, Wednesday evening, was, as usual, a conspicuous success. The old banquet room at the Brevoort, which has been the League's meeting place this year, was comfortably crowded, the ladies being largely represented.

At 7:30 attack was opened on the following—

The first speaker was Miss Ida Tarbell, who, as the president said, really needed no introduction to League members. She spoke, seriously yet wittily, on the selling of books, and of some lacks in the present day bookshop. She deplored the want of knowledge of books which too many professed booksellers show and entered a plea for the old fashioned shop, which was a center for the intellectual life of the community, a place of resort for thoughtful people, who found in the bookseller a congenial friend and fellow philosopher. She admitted that the bookstore (founded by Miss Peabody in Boston) that came nearest to her ideal proved a financial failure in the end, and, after a commendatory notice of Bemerton, the bookseller, in E. V. Lucas' "Over Bemerton's" (which she commended to the reading of every bookseller), added whimsically that Bemerton had a shrewd little daughter who saw that some of his books were sold. She also paid warm respects to the Seine-side book stalls of Paris, pointing out what a real and important part that mile of little open air book markets played in the life of the city. Miss Tarbell's interest in things bookish was evidently so warm that her sharpest criticism was really kindly.

Mrs. Fisher, better known to the booktrade as "Dorothy Canfield," the author of "The Squirrel Cage," said some things that were new about the novel in general and the "great American novel" in particular, and said them in a way that might justly have been described as eloquent. She pointed out first of all that that word "American" was really superfluous, as, if an American author ever did write a great novel, it would have to be of American life. Then she analyzed American life; and pointed out that skyscrapers, gigantic railroad systems, Wall Street finance, police graft, great wheat fields, and what not, were not the fundamental substance of which great novels are builded, that no great novels based on or exploiting such excrescent phases of American life ever will be or can be written.

Three subjects, and three only, she said, has the novelist at his command as material—"men, women and children." These and not the church and feudalism, formed the subject matter of the troubadours of the thirteenth century. These, and not the political cataclysms of the first decade of the nineteenth century, formed the subject matter of Jane Austen's great novels. Dickens, Thackeray, Meredith—all the great novelists, she pointed out, wrote primarily of "men, women and children," their passions, hates, loves and fears, and only very, very incidentally of the political events that overshadowed them, the social forces that to some extent directed them, or the business world to which some of them had to give toll of time and labor.

Having stated that the American novelist who tries to write a big novel of "anything else than American men, women and children" is going in the wrong direction, Mrs. Fisher humorously added that the only reason the great American novel had not yet been written was that as yet no American authors had been great enough to do it. Then she pointed out that Americans were pre-eminent in bridge-building, machine fabrication and gigantic commercial systemization because for three centuries America has been battling to subdue natural forces and has developed the qualities necessary for success in that struggle. American writers to-day have no such "resilient springboard of precedent." "We," she said, "to-day are still pioneers, building the foundations on which later perhaps a great American literature will be reared."

The PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY would like to have had a stenographic report of Mrs. Fisher's speech; it deserves a far wider circle of readers.

The last speaker, Miss Ida Vera Simonton, author of the powerful novel of equatorial Africa, "Hell's Playground," and probably as familiar with that particular nook of the world as any white woman, gave some interesting anecdotes of her life and experiences there.

Twice during the evening Mrs. Frederick Leypoldt sang—in the way that makes her, to League members, a most welcome addition to any meeting to which the League can induce her to come.

The following are the latest additions to the league's membership roll:

LITERARY AND TRADE NOTES.

KATE F. KIMBALL'S "English Cathedral Journey" is a notable addition to the Crowell Travel Series.

A CENTENARY edition of "The Life of Sir Isaac Pitman" has just been issued by Sir Isaac Pitman & Sons, Ltd.

THE editors of the Catholic Encyclopedia, the last volume of which has just come from the press, are preparing an exhaustive index of the work.

"THE DAUGHTER OF BRAHM," by I. A. R. Wylie, a story of the discord between the forever separated East and West, is on the Bobbs-Merrill list.

"PAUL I. OF RUSSIA, Son of Catherine the Second," by K. Walizewski, announced for publication last fall, but delayed, will be published this spring by J. B. Lippincott Co.

As the central figure of his new novel, "One Woman's Life"—published by Macmillan on the 19th—Robert Herrick has chosen a woman of brains and attractiveness, whose greatest desire is for supremacy in the social world.

THREE of Gov. Wilson's essays will be published by Houghton Mifflin in a limited, one-volume edition about the time of the inauguration. They are: "Mere Literature," "The Author Himself," and "On an Author's Choice of Company."

INDUSTRIAL co-operation, regarded by many people as an antiquated and abandoned scheme, is the subject of James Ford's "Co-operation in New England, Urban and Rural," just published by the Survey Associates, Inc., of New York City.

FARNHAM BISHOP, author of "Panama, Past and Present" (Century Co.), is the son of the Hon. Joseph Bucklin Bishop, secretary of the Isthmian Canal Commission and official fountainhead of information for all writers and lecturers on the subject.

EMERSON HOUGH, author of "John Rawn," is preparing to embark on an expedition into the Arctic Circle early in the spring. Mr. Hough has made several trips to Alaska. He is a great lover of the trail, and hunts and fishes in the most out-of-the-way places more than half the year.

IN "King Edward in His True Colors" (Small, Maynard), Edward Legge amplifies his uncompromising criticism of certain portions of Sir Sidney Lee's "Dictionary" monograph, and treats of many interesting episodes in the late king's life, including amusing and interesting anecdotes.

"THE VIOLET BOOK," a garden manual, by D. Allen-Brown; "The Life and Letters of William Cobbett in England and America," by Lewis Melville; and "Modern Etchings, Mezzotints and Dry-Points," the special winter number of the International Studio, were published yesterday by the John Lane Co.

"THE NIGHT RIDERS," the new novel by Ridgwell Cullum, published on February 1, has been reported in various Boston, New York and Philadelphia newspapers as being one of the six best-sellers for the first and second weeks after publication. This book went through two large printings before date of publication.

"THE MATING OF LYDIA" is the title of Mrs. Humphry Ward's new book, announced for publication in March by Doubleday, Page & Company. The story is described as a modern English love story, laid in rural England, so well depicted by the author of "The Testing of Diana Mallory," "Lady Rose's Daughter," "Eleanor," etc.

IT is now definitely announced that "The Amateur Gentleman," the new 625-page novel by Jeffery Farnol, whose "The Broad Highway" is in its 140th thousand, will be published in this country March 15. Mr. Farnol here tells of the adventures that befell a sturdy country-bred youth who sets forth for London to "become a gentleman."

THE Putnams will publish, late in March, a new novel by Humfrey Jordan, author of "The Joyous Wayfarer." The plot of "Patchwork Comedy" involves the defeat of a most cunningly-laid scheme of blackmail, long successfully pursued, and the blending of two lives victimized, but thus inadvertently brought together by the astute defamer.

THE UNIVERSAL PUBLICITY COMPANY, of New York, supply directories from all the countries of the world. They are the representatives for the "Anuario de la America Latina," "The Directory and Chronical for China, Japan, Indo-China, Straits Settlements, Philippines," etc., "The London Directory," Cuban and Spanish directories, and many others.

THREE works of fiction by writers of note are on the Scribner list this month: "The Isle of Life," by Stephen French Whitman, who wrote "Predestined"; "Witching Hill," by E. W. Hornung; and "The Lore of Proserpine," by Maurice Hewlett, a partly biographical collection of stories and sketches of a deeply imaginative nature. Maurice Hewlett has also in the February list "Helen Redeemed, and Other Poems," relating, most of them, to the tale of Troy.

A THOROUGH study of the history of the American cotton manufacturing industry in all its phases has just been published by Harvard University in a volume entitled "The Cotton Manufacturing Industry in the United States," by Dr. M. T. Copeland, instructor in the Harvard Graduate School of Business Administration. The book includes chapters on combinations, market organizations and the knit-goods industry, and presents a comparison of American and European conditions.

THE American Book Import Business and the Subscription Agency for American Periodicals, conducted for many years past by Kegan Paul, Trench, Trubner & Co., Ltd., of London, has been transferred to and amalgamated with the American Book Agency of Arthur F. Bird, of 22 Bedford Street, Strand, from which address the business will in future will be conducted. Included in the list of periodicals transferred to the new agency are the Library Journal and PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY.

"THE STORY OF STEPHEN COMPTON," a realistic novel of the new industrialism and the social caldron, by J. E. Patterson; "Success," the story of an inventor's struggle, an aerial torpedo and international complications, by Una L. Silberrad; and B. Paul Neuman's "Simon Brandin," giving a sudden graphic perception of the primitive horror and heroism of the sacrifices actually being made today by the Nihilists for their ideals, are three unusual novels just published by the George H. Doran Co.

THE announcements of Longmans, Green & Co. include: "Organized Democracy" (American Citizen Series), by Frederick A. Cleveland; "Confessions of a Convert," by Monsignor Robert Hugh Benson; "Sermon Notes," by Cardinal Newman; "The Ministry of the Word," by Canon W. C. E. Newbolt; "A Book of Devotional Readings from the Literature of Christendom," edited by the Rev. J. M. Connell; "Anti-Christ, and Other Sermons," by John Neville Figgis; and "Catholicism and Life," by the Rev. C. H. Sharpe.

JOHN FLEMING WILSON'S "The Princess of Sorry Valley," announced for spring publication by Sturgis & Walton Company, will tell of the experiences of a college girl, educated at Bryn Mawr, who goes back to her South Sea home on a small island owned and ruled by her father. A love story binds together a series of incidents, which grow out of the heroine's interesting attempt to bring the manners and customs of a South Sea settlement into line with the theories drawn from the sociological doctrines imbibed in her college studies.

CAPT. B. GRANVILLE BAKER'S book, "The Passing of the Turkish Empire in Europe," should be an opportune production. The author traces the origin, rise and decline of the Ottoman rule, and shows the causes of its fall. He also gives an account of the various States which are in alliance against the Turks. Capt. Baker is in a position to see behind the diplomatic scenes, and his book is written down to the last hour. He is also an artist, and the volume will be illustrated with sketches from his brush and pen. Seeley & Service are the English publishers.

THE publications announced by Houghton Mifflin Co. for February 26 include: "Pan-Germanism," by Roland G. Usher; "W. A. G.'s Tale," by Margaret Turnbull; "The Reasonableness of the Religion of Jesus," by W. S. Rainsford, D.D.; "Goethe's Key to Faust," by William P. Andrews; "Sappho and the Island of Lesbos," by Mary Mills Patrick; "Mahommed the Great Arabian," by Meredith Townsend; "Australasia," a new volume in the English People Over Seas, by A. Wyatt Tilby; and "With the Victorious Bulgarians," by Lieut. Hermenegild Wagner.

MCBRIDE, NAST & CO. will publish, in February, the following books: "Reclaiming the Old House," by Charles Edward Hooper, and "The Dutch Colonial House," by Aymar Embury, II., in the Country House Library; "Modern Farm Buildings," by Alfred Hopkins; "Golf for the Late Beginner," by Henry Hughes; "Country Rambles Round London," by Anthony Collett; "The Gardener and the Cook," by Lucy H. Yates; "Lilies," by H. S. Adams; "The Home Poultry Book," by E. I. Farrington; "The Children in the Shadow," by Ernest K. Coulter, who was for ten years Clerk of the Children's Court of New York City; and "Thorney," Alexander Black's latest novel.

"As soon as labor becomes dear, then the machine will do the work we now have done by human toil, because the machine is cheaper. But so long as an inexhaustible supply of cheap foreign labor is dumped at the doors of our mills and factories, just so long will the era of the machine be postponed"—so argues Frank J. Warne, special expert of the Census Bureau in "The Immigrant Invasion," announced for March 14 by Dodd, Mead & Co. The present agitation over the immigration bill makes the book opportune. A new book from the same publishers, "Until the Day Break," by W. L. George, describes the evolution of the anarchist in the person of the hero, Israel Kalisch, from his boyhood in Cracow through his New York and London struggles to the ultimate bomb.

MR. A. S. M. HUTCHINSON, the young English author, whose second novel, "The Happy Warrior," has placed him at once among the writers who count, would have entered the army but for defective eyesight. After studying medicine for a while he took the plunge into journalism. Four years ago his first novel, "Once Aboard the Lugger," appeared, and gave the author an immediate standing with lovers of good literature. Mr. Hutchinson did actually begin writing his second novel in 1909, and two years later he thought he had finished it. But when "The Happy Warrior" was read over for a final revision it did not please its author, and he decided that it must be rewritten. Thus it was not finally completed until last September. It certainly justifies the work he has given it. A sixth edition of "Once Aboard the Lugger" has just been issued by Mitchell Kennerley.

members. Among the hosts were Cyrus H. K. Curtis, J. B. Lippincott, Charles Jenkins, George W. Ochs, George W. Jacobs and Charles C. Shoemaker. The guests included, among others, Dr. S. Weir Mitchell, Dr. C. C. Harrison, Charles Heber Clark and Dr. W. W. Keen. The object of the affair, in which nearly 100 club members participated, was to engineer a friendly feeling between publisher and author, and to afford an opportunity for informal suggestions calculated to promote and mutualize the interests of the two arms in the field of literature.

A GREAT Japanese importer of books, R. Matsushite, the manager of the Maruzen Company, has been to London, and he has been talking about the relationship of Japan toward foreign books. "We import," he says, "all kinds of books from every civilized country, but one special kind of books is imported from one country more than another." For example, Japan looks chiefly to America for works on commerce and industry, to Germany for medical works, to England for books of literature and scholarship and social progress. He notes that the Japanese demand for Shakespeare and other classical writers is continually rising. He also tells us that modern English writers like Bernard Shaw, H. G. Wells and Arnold Bennett are in good demand in Japan, which likewise is interested in Russian literature. Mostly, however, it is read through the English translations, because few Japanese know Russia, or, indeed, want to know it.

A GOOD-NATURED protest is made by a contributor to the Westminster Review against uniform bindings for different sorts of books. "Marcus Aurelius," garbed exactly like the "Morte d'Arthur," violates one's sense of the fitness of things. A row of books, all looking like one another, compels one to contrast "their vacant, inane aspect with the calm, benignant look and contemplative air of their living neighbors. Some books may not be small, for to deprive them of suitable dimensions is to rob them of their means of self-expression." Who could force Shakespeare into the same mould with Herrick, for instance, or Milton into the dainty miniature format that would set off Shelley and Keats? To put biography and history in swaddling clothes is to offer an affront to them, while "the spectacle of an 'Origin of Species' in the bondage of meagre limits, and constrained to rub shoulders, perhaps, with an indifferent romance, is one hardly less pathetic than that of a great man fallen from power, and subjected to the insults of a plebeian mob."

MID-WINTER publications of Small, Maynard & Co. include the following: "The Balkan War," by Philip Gibbs and Bernard Grant; "The Confession of a Fool," by August Strindberg; "English Literature, 1880-1905," by J. M. Kennedy; the first volume of "A Modern History of the English People," by R. H. Gretton; "The Eurhythmics of Jacques-Dalcroze"; "King Edward in His True Colors," by Edward Legge; "The Law of a Household," by Eunice Beecher; "To Mesopotamia and Kurdistan in Disguise," by E. B. Soane; "New Lives for Old," by William Carleton; "Our Book of Memories," by Justin McCarthy and Mrs. Campbell Praed; "Problems of the Pacific," by Frank Fox; "Republican France: 1870-1912, Her Presidents, Statesmen, Policy, Vicissitudes and Social Life," by Ernest A. Vizetelly; "Ripostes," by Ezra Pound; "Syndicalism and the General Strike: An Explanation," by Arthur D. Lewis; "Tommy Tregennis," by Mary E. Phillips; "Uncharted Seas," by Robert Adger Bowen; and "The Windham Papers," in two volumes, with an introduction by the Earl of Rosebery.

HENRI BERGSON, the eminent French philosopher, whose "Creative Evolution" has been a non-fiction best-seller for two years past, is the latest foreign writer to pay us a first visit. He arrived in New York week before last to deliver a series of lectures at Columbia University. Professor Bergson's works have been translated into many languages, and his influence is making itself felt in many lands in philosophy, in literature and in art. Unlike most philosophers that preceded him, he is a prophet honored in his own land. Dr. Slosson, of the Independent, in his excellent essay on Bergson, describes Bergson's popularity as a lecturer as follows:

> His lecture room is the largest in the College de France, but it is too small to accommodate the crowd which would hear him. A cosmopolitan crowd it is that on Wednesdays awaits the lecturer. French, Italian, English, American, German, Yiddish and Russian are to be distinguished among them; perhaps the last predominates among the foreign tongues, for young people of both sexes come from Russia in swarms to put themselves under his instruction. The polyglot audience is silent as M. Bergson ascends the rostrum and begins to talk, in slow, smooth, clear tones, accented by nervous gestures of his slender hands. His figure is slight and his face thin and pointed, almost ecclesiastical in appearance. His quick turns of thought break through the conventional forms of logic and find expression in striking and original similes drawn from his wide range of reading. Bergson's students call him "The Lark," because the higher he flies the sweeter he sings.

An acute thinker, Professor Bergson possesses a masterly, clear and direct style, presenting his views on most difficult themes with fascinating clearness.

E. P. DUTTON & Co. have a long list of spring announcements. It includes in fiction: "American Nobility," by Pierre de Coulevain, in a new translation by Alys Hallard; "The Fear of Living," by Henri Bordeaux, translated from the seventy-fourth French edition by Ruth Helen Davis; "The Quest of Glory" and "God's Playthings," by Marjorie Bowen; "A Slice of Life," by Robert Halifax; "Seven Scots Stories," by Jean Findlater; "Crossriggs" and "Penny Monypenny," by Jane and Mary Findlater. Miscellaneous: "Essays in Biography," by Charles Whibley; "The War Drama of the Eagles," by Edward Fraser; "The Philosophy of Ruskin," by André Chevrillon, translated by Andrew Boyle; "The Influence of Baudelaire in France and England," by G. Turquet-Milner; "The Nature of Woman," by J. Lionel Tayler; "The China

Year Book for 1913," by H. T. Montague Bell; "Prayers, Ancient and Modern," by William Angus Knight; "Yang Chu's Garden of Pleasure," translated from the Chinese by Prof. Anton Forke, with an introduction by H. Cranmer-Byng; "Dante and the Mystics," by Edmund G. Gardner; "The Sea and the Jungle," by H. M. Tomlinson; "Shakespeare's London," by T. Fairman Ordish, new edition, and the following numbers of the Channels of English Literature Series: "The English Novel," by Prof. George Saintsbury; "English Lyric Poetry," by Ernest Rhys; "English Dramatic Poetry," by Prof. Felix Schelling; "English Elegiac, Didactic and Religious Poetry," by the Rev. Dr. H. C. Beeching; "English Satirists and Humorous Literature," by Oliphant Smeaton; "The English Essay and Essayists," by Prof. Hugh Walker; "English History and Schools of History," by Prof. Richard Lodge; and "English Criticism," by J. W. H. Atkins.

PICK-UPS.

REWARDS.

Two writers of fiction were sitting at a table in a restaurant famous for its literary clientele. One was the well-known George Parr Barrish, author of the best-selling books of the year, "The Red Suspenders" and "The Green Gaiters." The other was Percy Ibbington, author of several volumes of which the leading booksellers had consented to take "five copies on consignment."

Percy Ibbington was speaking. "That you are successful in a commercial sense," he was saying to Mr. Barrish, "I freely admit. You have cultivated the lower public tastes; while I —I have cultivated Art. You have sold into the hundred thousands. I have a following of but two or three hundred. You are illustrated by Harrison Huttston. I go before the public without illustration at $1.20 net. Yet, my friend, I do not envy you. I am content to go on in my own unpopular way to the end."

"We have no quarrel, then," said the other. "I must say that I love Art as well as you; the difference between us is that I do not use it in my business. Yet I make no apology for my work. My ambition has been to interest the blacksmith and the coal-heaver and the servant girl, and I have done it. I also wanted to make money, and I have done that. The critics agree to a man that my books are rotten, and they sell by the thousands. The critics are also agreed that your books are True Literature, and nobody buys them. You are content, you say; well, so am I."

"If it were only a matter of to-day and to-morrow," replied Percy Ibbington, "I should admit that you had the best of the argument. But I am working for the regard of posterity. In ten years your books will have been forgotten as completely as yesterday afternoon's newspapers. In ten years I shall be just reaping my reward."

"So be it," replied George Parr Barrish. "Let us go. I am reluctant to quit this interesting conversation; but I have promised to write another novel this week, and I must be at work." And so they rose from the table and went, Mr. Barrish having settled the bill.

But a business man, of the shy, retiring type permitted to come to this restaurant, had been a keen listener to the conversation. When the two authors had gone, he made a few notes hastily in his note-book.

Ten years passed. One day the business man who had overheard the above conversation was rummaging among his old diaries and papers, and found the notes which he had made at the restaurant. The conversation came back to him, and so impressed him and aroused his curiosity that he immediately went to the nearest bookstore.

After consulting his notes, he asked the salesman: "Have you any books by George Parr Barrish?"

The salesman looked blank. He scratched his head thoughtfully, and replied: "I don't remember ever to have heard of a writer of that name."

"Surely you must know—I understood he was quite famous in his way," said the customer.

"Well, sir, it may be as you say, but I don't seem to recall either the man or his books."

"Ah," said the business man, "the artistic fellow was right!" Then he added:

"Please give me the latest novel by Percy Ibbington."

"Percy Ibbington?" queried the book clerk. "Percy Ibbington? I'm sorry, sir. I don't think I ever heard of him, either."—FREEMAN TILDEN, in Puck.

BIBLIOGRAPHIC NOTES.

FROM Ludwig Rosenthal's Antiquariat, of Munich, we receive a catalogue of Hebrew incunabula, the first catalogue of its sort, we believe, to be issued. Hebrew incunabula are, as it is probably unnecessary to state, all of unusual rarity. Of the 99 or a possible 100 examples known, this catalogue lists sixty-eight. There are thirty-two reproductions in black-and-white of sample pages and wood-cut initials. The collection was made by a well-known German connoisseur and is well bound. The dealers note especially the first Hebrew Pentateuch, printed on parchment, the first Hebrew prayer-book, Avicenna in five volumes, a fine folio commentary of Nachmanides and a very early treatise on the Talmud.

"Carleton, W:," pseud. New lives for old. Bost., Small, Maynard, c. 222 p. D. $1.20 n.

Author of "One way out" in this book carries on his story of how he started over again in New England from the viewpoint of the immigrant. His business prospered, he bought a farm, and in the country village he encountered a fresh set of conditions. The town was asleep, and unless the American inhabitant woke up he would find that the foreign element was going to own it. This is the situation as he sees it all over the country, the United States no longer belongs to the people who made it, but "is being made all over again, and is going to belong to those who help in that new making."

Ford, Ja. Co operation in New England, urban and rural; introd. by Fs. G. Peabody. N. Y., Charities Publication Com. 21+237 p. fold. tab., D. (Russell Sage Foundation pubs.) $1.50.

Scores of co-operative stores in America have succeeded, but hundreds have failed. The general public has been indifferent until the rapidly rising cost of living has driven housewives to their wits' end and led to the formation of housewives' leagues, neighborhood buying clubs, municipal markets, etc. Book discusses the causes of failure and of success. Author shows that in all the failures of co-operative stores in New England, the causes of failure were the same; in all the successes, those causes were absent. And he shows that the stores which have succeeded have paid profits—and paid them to the purchasers. Index.

the man works to create national opera for England. His eighteen year old wife slaves for him to the verge of starvation. Her wild brother comes to the rescue, and through him a former lover, also a peer of England, hears of her plight and throughout the musician's career watches over the wife. She might have been a great singer, but devotes herself wholly to keeping her husband at "concert pitch" as composer. Gives a telling picture of the unfitness for practical life of a wholly self-absorbed genius.

Gives an intimate picture of the King, both as Prince of Wales and sovereign, and amplifies author's uncompromising criticism of certain portions of Sir Sidney Lee's "Dictionary" monograph. Book also deals with the personal relations between the King and the Kaiser, "the baccarat case," "the prince's debt scandal," and in the section entitled "the great figure" treats of King Edward from many points of view, including the anecdotal and amusing.

Lincoln, Natalie Sumner. The lost dispatch. N. Y., Appleton. c. 309 p. pls. D. $1.30 n.

First chapters are taken up with Captain Lloyd's (United States Secret Service) endeavors to prove that Nancy Newton is a rebel spy. He follows her to Sheridan's winter quarters at Winchester and succeeds in obtaining an incriminating dispatch. Nancy is arrested at a ball. Lloyd, on being sent to testify against her is found dead in bed. There is no sign of a struggle, and the mystery is deepened by the surgeon's report after the autopsy. The denouement is surprising.

McCarthy, Justin. Our book of memories; letters of Justin McCarthy to Mrs. Campbell Praed; il. from photographs. Bost., Small, Maynard. 8+463 p. facsims., O. $4 n.

Author collaborated in several novels with Mrs. Campbell Praed. This collaboration was the fruit of a life-long friendship, and until his death Mr. McCarthy was in the habit of keeping her informed by letter of all his political and literary activities. Volume consists of these letters, edited and annotated by Mrs. Praed. Owing to the fact that a great deal of the book is occupied with the stirring events arising out of the Gladstone Home Rule Bills, as with other moments of English history, it presents vivid pictures of the political, social and literary life of the time. Book contains personal memories of Parnell, Gladstone, Lord Morley, and distinguished members of the Irish party, as well as of many other men and women, American as well as English. Index.

Moore, F: Ferdinand. The devil's admiral; il. in color by Anton Otto Fischer. Garden City, N. Y., Doubleday, Page. c. 295 p. D. $1.25 n.

A pirate story whose action covers only a day and a half and never loosens the tension until the final chapter. Trenholm, a war correspondent during the Russo-Japanese war, goes to Manila to await further orders. On arrival he finds he must go on to Hong Kong, and engages passage in a boat sailing the same afternoon. All day long he is followed by a missionary and a red-headed sailor, both of whom embark on the same boat. Trouble arises as soon as the steamer is well started and excitement follows thick and fast, first one side on top, then the other, until at the end of thirty-six hours there are but four survivors, one of whom is the red-headed man.

Advertising Rates

One page	$25 00
Half page	14 00
Quarter page	7 00
Eighth page	4 00
One-sixteenth page	2 00

The above rates are for unspecified positions. Special rates for preferred position (full pages only).

Higher rates are charged for the Summer Reading. Educational Number and Christmas Bookshelf, and for the monthly Book Review supplement sections.

Advertising copy should reach us Tuesday noon—earlier, if proof is desired out-of-town. Forms close Thursday noon.

Under the heading "BOOKS WANTED" booktrade subscribers, under their own names, are given five nonpareil lines (exclusive of address) free advertisement for specific books out of print in any issue except special numbers, but not exceeding 100 lines a year. If over five lines are sent the excess is at 10 cents a line. Books not out of print, unspecified wants repeated matter, and all advertisements from nonsubscribers cost 10 cents a line. Objectionable books are excluded so far as they are noted.

In answering, please state edition, condition and price, including postage or express charges. Houses that will deal exclusively on a cash-on-delivery basis should put [Cash] after their firm name. The appearance of advertisements in this column, or elsewhere in the WEEKLY, does not furnish a guarantee of credit. While it endeavors to safeguard its columns by withholding the privilege of advertising should occasion arise, booksellers should take usual precautions in extending credit.

"Books Wanted" must be designated by actual title, not by "any."

Write your wants plainly, on one side of the sheet only. Illegible "wants" are ignored. The WEEKLY is not responsible for errors. Parties with whom there is no account must pay in advance.

Under "BOOKS FOR SALE" or for other small undisplayed advertisements, the charge is 10 cents a nonpareil line. No reduction for repeated matter. Count seven words to the line.

GROSSET & DUNLAP'S JUVENILE LIST

When the buyers were ordering our Juveniles for the Holidays, they knew the Rover Boys Series and the Tom Swift Series were big sellers and they ordered, as they thought, accordingly; but what they didn't reckon on was the tremendous increase in readers since the Christmas before. The consequence was that the order that was large enough in 1911 was not nearly large enough in 1912. The buyers made another discovery, too: the boy that gets one of these books as a present at Christmas does a lot of talking about it and makes readers for these favorites right along. Don't buy for the holidays alone—the mouth to mouth advertising by the boys keeps the interest lively all the year. Buy the lively stock to supply the lively demand every month in the year.

Here's our 60 cent per volume line:

The Old Favorite

The Rover Boys Series

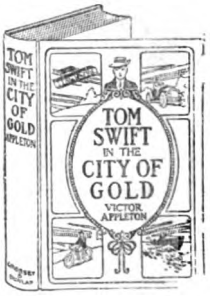
By ARTHUR M. WINFIELD. 16 volumes. A new volume ready about May. Illustrated and in attractive colored jackets.

THE PUTNAM HALL SERIES. By ARTHUR M. WINFIELD. Companion stories to The Rover Boys Series. 6 volumes. Illustrated. Colored jackets.

THE DICK HAMILTON SERIES. By HOWARD R. GARIS. 4 volumes. Illustrated. Colored jackets.

THE RAILROAD SERIES. By ALLEN CHAPMAN. 5 volumes. Illustrated. Colored jackets.

THE FLAG AND FRONTIER SERIES. By Capt. RALPH BONEHILL. 9 volumes. Illustrated. Colored jackets.



Here's our 40 cent per volume line:

All illustrated and in colored jackets.

The Swiftest Seller in the Line is

The Tom Swift Series

By VICTOR APPLETON. 15 volumes. A new volume ready about May.

And a very close second is

THE OUTDOOR CHUMS SERIES. By Capt. QUINCY ALLEN. 5 volumes.

Also swift movers:

THE BOYS OF COLUMBIA HIGH SERIES. By GRAHAM B. FORBES. 5 volumes.

THE YOUNG REPORTER SERIES. By HOWARD R. GARIS. 5 volumes.

THE EDWARD S. ELLIS SERIES. 8 volumes.

THE SEA TREASURE SERIES. By ROY ROCKWOOD. 4 volumes.

THE RISE IN LIFE SERIES. By HORATIO ALGER, JR. 11 volumes.

THE ENTERPRISE SERIES FOR BOYS. 7 volumes. By such lively writers as MATTHEW WHITE, JR., Capt. BONEHILL and others.

Drop us a postal asking for complete list of the titles that make up our famous juvenile line—check the titles you want and write, phone, or wire your order.

The following is reprinted from the New York Sun, issue of January 25th, 1913:

"Yes, the prospects are very bright indeed, and, mark me, we are entering upon a big book season. There's luck in odd numbers, you will remember, and Fair Fortune is, I know, planning to smile sweetly upon the year 1913," says F. T. J. Nunan, senior traveller for the house of L. C. Page & Company, 53 Beacon Street, Boston, known far and wide to the book trade, giving his views on the possibilities which the year 1913 opens up to publishers. "The Presidential election is settled," he continues, "and while I believe that some political reforms must of necessity be inaugurated under the new control, I cannot conceive how the prosperous conditions of the country will be disturbed, for what will be done politically will no doubt be of a safe and sound nature and not at all disturbing to the business conditions of the country. 'The far West' indicates by its present orders that its people are anticipating a very prosperous future, and they base their expectations, with good reason, upon the vast possibilities opened up to all sections of the country by that gigantic enterprise, created by American brains and made possible by the backing of American capital—the Panama Canal. I can see no clouds upon the commercial horizon and indications are bright for a splendid business year. My house is so confident of a prosperous year that it plans to publish more and better books than at any time during the history of its growth. And so, let's be sunny!"

Mr. Nunan has been a large factor in the making of the great popularity of the "Little Colonel" books, by Annie Fellows Johnston, and the Montgomery books—"Anne of Green Gables," etc. This year he is confident of repeating with the Porter books, since in addition to the recent successes—"Miss Billy" and "Miss Billy's Decision"—he is armed with a third volume for spring publication, "the best yet." The title is "Pollyanna," and with the aid of his hosts of friends in and out of the trade he is confident that his publicity campaign will quickly land the new Porter book among the "six best sellers."

Mr. Nunan's efforts will be ably seconded by Mr. Harry W. Sully and Mr. John J. Mullin and in some degree by "the man at the desk."

Juvenile "Best-Sellers" Our Specialty

WHERE WE STAND

¶ WE ARE STILL ON TOP

We are doing more business than ever before. We enjoy being busy and we intend to keep so. It was a hard pull to get a series of boys' books that would beat every other line on the market, but we have taken the Motor Boys to the top of the list, and

¶ WE MEAN TO STAY

The dealer will find our line his easiest sellers. Why? Because we are putting in our best efforts for him:—we have a fine list of books, and we advertise heavily where advertising counts, with the boys and girls themselves.

¶ JUVENILES

Most of our standard series will have new titles. The Baseball Joe Series, the College Sports Series, the Racer Boys Series and the Dorothy Dale Series will all be added to, and Clarence Young has a new Motor Boys book. The increasing popularity and success of the Webster Series for boys has induced us to add a large list of new titles to this grade of books, for both the boys and girls, making this line undoubtedly the strongest in the market.

¶ ART SERIES

Our White and Gold series of art booklets are continually growing in favor. We have added this year the finest line of Christmas Cards we could secure, and we are certain they will be winners.

¶ DEAN'S RAG BOOKS

These books are well-known to the trade, and are unequalled. They have won medals at exhibitions all over the world. They are Washable, Indestructible and Hygienic, being the only rag books the youngsters can eat without bad results! Several changes and additions have been made in the list.

¶ PERSONAL

Our travellers will call on you during the year with complete samples of our quick-selling lines and we earnestly urge you to wait and give them most careful consideration before completing your purchases for your holiday trade.

The Bible Message for Modern Manhood

By CRAIG S. THOMS, Ph.D. Net, 75 cents; postage, 8 cents.

A thoroughly modern book prepared in a scholarly and interesting way, and pervaded by a reverent and devout spirit from beginning to end.

Freedom and Authority in Religion

By E. Y. MULLINS, D.D. Net, $1.50; postpaid.

This book is in Doctor Mullins' best vein—strong in reasoning, attractive in style, and, of course, evangelical in tone.

Elements of Spirituality

By G. H. FERRIS, D.D. Net, 50 cents.

"These sermons are characterized by Doctor Ferris' well-known literary suggestiveness and beauty of style, and trend from beginning to end toward that completeness of life that finds itself only in the Man of Nazareth. No one can follow this pathway and not be helped."

True Wealth

By J. SHERMAN WALLACE. Net, 50 cents.

This book is from the pen of the author of "What of the Church?" and is a strong protest against the materialism of the day which is so inclined to estimate a man's standing by the property he is able to accumulate.

Second Large Printing—Second Week

"THE PARASITE"

By HELEN R. MARTIN

Judge Randall's wife in court had won
Divorce. (It comes out later.)
And he, left with their baby son,
A bitter woman hater.

His sister takes the boy to train,
But finds him so much bother
That she resolves that she'll obtain
A help-mate for his father.

She chose one who might well be styled
A queen of Southern beauty,
Then talks to Randall of his child
And tells him what's his duty.

He seemed unmoved; would not decide,
But made his visits often,
And sister soon was satisfied
His heart, this girl would soften.

And meantime raged his self-willed son
Aunt Sally found that only one
Could curb his rebel spirit—

That one, a guest (one of the kind
That stay when un-invited).
She liked him though and didn't mind
The snubs or being slighted.

Then smashed like lightning from above
Were Auntie's dreams romantic,
When Randall saw his boy's great love
For Joan, the sycophantic.

His son came first. The course to take
Was plain, he saw no other,
So asked her only for his sake
To be young Arthur's mother.

So she becomes Judge Randall's wife.
But far too much we've told you.
The story of their married life
Will interest, startle—hold you.

Now Helen Martin's "Tillie" (Miss Of Mennonite conviction),
Was good, though not quite up to this—
Her finest work of fiction.

AMERICAN NOBILITY

By PIERRE DE COULEVAIN

The Story of an International Marriage

The conditions which any American girl must face who marries abroad are analyzed with a wise sympathy and that delicate charm of expression which has made this author's books more widely read than those of any living Frenchwoman. Its interest is especially direct and deep in America where marriage between those of different nations is frequent.

Ready March 1. Cloth, 12mo, net $1.35, postpaid $1.45.

"Crowned" by the French Academy

THE FEAR OF LIVING

By HENRY BORDEAUX Foreword by RENE DOUMIC

Translated by RUTH HELEN DAVIS from the 74th French edition.

The book has aroused hot discussion in France because of its daring exposition of the deep-seated modern evil of shirking all danger, and the responsibilities of life; it is a remarkable picture of French provincial life.

Ready in March. Cloth, 12mo, $1.35, postpaid $1.45.

RECENT FICTION

STARVING AMERICA

By Alfred W. McCann

This startling book describes the author's search for the natural law that would direct the feeding of his children. He relates how that law was found, and how its application to the diet of his household brought not only health, buoyancy and happiness to its adult members, but also what is of much more vital meaning to the American people, absolute immunity among his children to the so-called inevitable diseases of childhood. 12mo. Cloth. Net $1.50

TWO REMARKABLE BOOKS

Joseph Conrad's New Book

'TWIXT LAND AND SEA

By the author of "Youth," "Lord Jim," "The Mirror of the Sea," etc.

The three stories contained in this volume exhibit Conrad at the height of his powers. Not one could have been written by any other living man. Not one is like any other tale that ever was. The charming love and adventure of the seafaring life which he depicts in Eastern seas confirm the growing belief that he is among the greatest of living creative writers. 12mo. Cloth. Net $1.25

An International Sensation

By Morley Roberts

This book has roused a furore of controversy in England and America because of its relentless frankness. Under a thin veil of disguise, easily penetrated by those who recognize, one of the most curious life stories of a premier novelist of the English school of realists is told. The book has already taken a permanent place in literature as one of the most human of records. 12mo. Cloth. Net $1.25

Is Now Ready

Mystery, desperate and baffling, is frankly the thing in this new Rinehart novel. The sudden, unaccountable disappearance of a well-known actress; a thrilling case of mistaken identity; a network of incriminating circumstances pointing to the guilt of the actress' husband; a chain of evidence establishing a substantial alibi; clews galore indicating a score of possibilities; a jury trial; a strange love plot—all these go to make this tale more intense than any previous work by this popular author. Yet it still retains the characteristic Rinehart element of humor and cheer.

Mrs. Rinehart has never been seen to better advantage than in this thrilling novel, "The Case of Jennie Brice." Pictures by Bracker. $1.00 net.

THE WEAKER VESSEL

By E. F. Benson

Author of "Dodo," etc.

A beautiful young girl has within her the latent seeds of genius, and of a noble character. In the course of time she escapes from her quiet nest into the outside world; and in the course of time, like many young girls, she marries. Then comes her test. The husband, like her, is lovable, and in his way a genius; but he possesses one fatal defect of character—drunkenness, which, in the course of time, warps his whole nature. As he sinks lower, his wife rises higher. And when the inevitable catastrophe comes, she meets it with a noble and sunny fortitude which cannot fail to affect even cynical readers; and from the wreck builds up at last an enduring happiness. E. F. Benson, author of "Dodo," "The Climber," etc., has never written a better or bigger story.

Further Adventures of Craig Kennedy, Scientific Detective

Author of "The Silent Bullet," etc.

The publishers of The Cosmopolitan decided at one time that they had had enough of Craig Kennedy, and they cut him off. But they soon found that their million subscribers had by no means had enough. Such a storm of protests arose that Craig Kennedy promptly returned to the pages of the big magazine. Craig Kennedy tracks down criminals by the methods that a scientist would use in ferreting out a germ. How he outwits the Confidence King, is more astute than the Unofficial Spy, and can go as far beneath the surface of things as the Sand-hog; how he discovers the Germ of Death and sees the Invisible Ray; these are some of the incidents that will attract those who like to analyze and be thrilled, guess and be mystified—in other words, readers of detective fiction—to "The Poisoned Pen."

"I hold every man a debtor to his profession, from the which, as men do of course seek to receive countenance and profit, so ought they of duty to endeavor themselves by way of amends to be a help and an ornament thereunto."—BACON.

THE DANGER IN TOO GREAT DISCOUNTS.

FROM two separate retail sources—one a representative bookstore, one a well-known department store!—the PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY has received warnings of the dangers inherent in granting too great discounts on net books. Both are old, conservative, broad-grounded and successful businesses, whose opinions may be justly said to carry weight.

The old "regular" discount seldom, if ever, ran higher than "40 off," with "40 and 5" and "40 and 10" on quantity orders. Under the retail prices obtaining in the old days on regular books, "net" books at "a quarter off" undoubtedly showed a larger net profit to the bookseller—or perhaps it would be more correct to say, showed a smaller net loss—than "regular" books at "40 off."

The problem was a simple one: to raise the discount to a point showing the bookseller a profit, not a large profit, necessarily, but a profit. If we accept the ordinarily given figures of bookselling cost, twenty-eight per cent., "thirty off," would show a profit; a "third off," and especially "a third and 5," and "a third and 10," would show the dealer not only a sure profit, but a larger percentage of profit than most of us succeed in getting out of our businesses.

"A small profit, but it must be net," is the way the cost experts put it. The crux of the cost problem is the ascertainment to a surety that the profit is a net one. In the PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY for November 16 last was a very interesting summary of cost data. Merchandise costs, delivery and express charges, rent (even when you own your building)—these are costs seldom, if ever, overlooked. Others no less vital: interest on the investment; a proper salary allowance to yourself as manager, entirely outside your profits as proprietor; are just as real as merchandise costs, and few booksellers nowadays fail to make due allowance for them. But there are other entirely legitimate costs, approved by the best accounting practice, which many retailers, otherwise well informed, fail to take into account.

Take such items as annual apportionments to various reserves. Every bookseller makes an annual apportionment into a fire reserve—only he does it by paying a premium on an insurance policy! How many dealers insure their businesses against their own death and sickness by taking out personal life and accident insurance in favor of their businesses; against a panic year in general business or a sudden slump in the book trade by a properly built-up reserve of gilt-edged securities which will tide the business over the crisis; against bad debts and stock depreciation by adequate writings off and reserves? The costs of all these things are legitimate "expenses of doing business." After you have cared for these and other similar costs, you can well afford not to despise the "small profit," for you will know that it is indeed a net one.

Of course, the chief danger inherent in overlarge discounts is the stimulation to price-cutting. "Make the margin of profit large, and some fool is bound to come up who will want to give half of it away." The net-price system has been built up with too much labor to hazard it unnecessarily.

But besides this, there is another side. The margin between twenty-eight per cent. and 33⅓ and 10 per cent. is, unless the PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY is much mistaken, a greater margin of profit than any book publishing concern takes regularly out of its business. To give a larger discount and live, the publisher has but one recourse—to increase the retail price of his wares. This may seem a simple solution, but the thoughtful bookseller may well question its wisdom. Complaints of the existing high prices of books are widespread, and however unjustified, there is no doubt that any general increase of prices would to a certain extent cut off the patronage of certain book-buying classes which the bookseller could ill afford to lose. Professional people—teachers, ministers and their like—are the real book readers of the country; in the old days they, with the leisured class, were the chief book buyers. There is now no denying the fact that, what with the general high cost of living, without any adequate corresponding increase in professional salaries, this class has relatively declined in book-buying importance. Any movement which would tend, however slightly, to still further diminish this bookbuying should be, at least, given most careful consideration.

Now is the best time of the bookseller's year to make a "drive" on Bibles and prayer-books and religious gift books in general. The white and purple of the Easter season give excellent background for effective window displays. On the stationery side, of course, suggestions for window decorations and counter appeal are innumerable; but the bookseller who fails to see the opportunities of Eastertide for pushing the sale of books is not fully alive to his work. The list of religious gift books is a long one, and at every range of price; and the custom of book-giving at Easter, as on St. Valentine's, is a growing and eminently desirable one. Help it along.

THE 1912 volume of American Book Prices Current, edited as usual by Luther S. Livingston, and published by Dodd & Livingston, is this year swollen to 965 pages. 15,471 lots are recorded, as against 13,626 last year. These were selected from some 105,000 lots described in the 118 auction catalogs examined. As in 1911, the Hoe library so far overshadowed the other sales of the year in importance as unduly to eclipse them. It is unnecessary to add that Book Prices Current is invaluable to any dealer handling second-hand books.

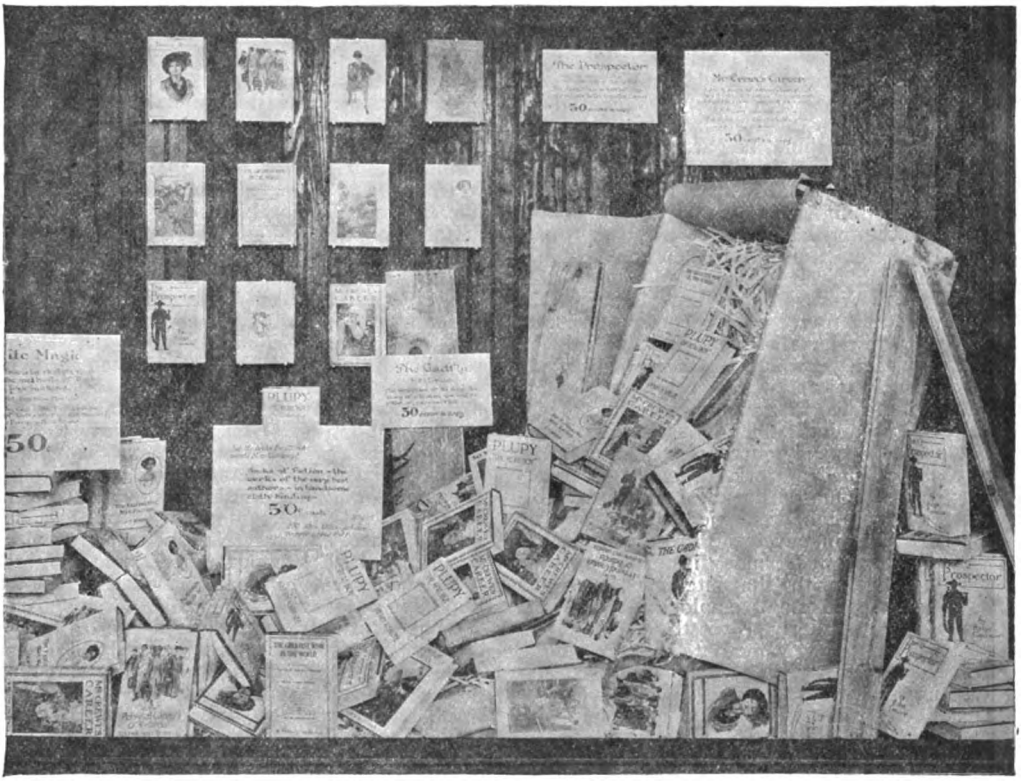
SOME METHODS OF SELLING IN FOREIGN BOOKSTORES.

AN ADDRESS BY ERNEST EISELE, OF BRENTANO'S, DELIVERED BEFORE THE NEW YORK BOOKSELLERS' SCHOOL.

IT is with great reluctance that I have acceded to the request of the chairman of the committee to speak to you on some methods of selling in foreign bookstores. The principles governing the book trade here and abroad differ quite considerably. The only reason which I can give for my being here is the fact that there is something in our trade which is the same all the world over, and by bringing to your attention some details which govern the sales of books in continental countries perhaps to some of you there may be suggested an idea which can suitably be adapted to the conditions here. The interchange of ideas on similar subjects and problems and their discussion can only bring good results.

The German book trade, with its splendid organization and its ramifications throughout the world, is usually pointed out as a good example. Its seemingly healthy condition is primarily based on the very close alliance of interests between publishers and booksellers, who, through their combined organization, Boersenverein, with its separate city and state organizations throughout the Empire, are able to maintain and control the published retail price and otherwise give assurance of an income to the booksellers. There is hardly another country in the world where there are so many booksellers per capita of the population, except Denmark and Holland, both countries with strong trade organizations, based on lines similar to the German one, and the field of the retail bookseller is hardly anywhere more intensively worked than there. This great mass of retail booksellers throughout the country forms such a valuable selling organization that it enables the production of many a book which otherwise might never see the light.

It is true that the German publisher takes the large part of the risk, as very often he has to print editions larger than his probable sales warrant; but, on the other hand, he can often go into publishing ventures and rely upon his correspondents to do their utmost to bring their goods to the knowledge of the interested public. The publisher in America has to spend money for direct, broadcast advertising of his new publications—in papers, magazines, etc. Abroad, the burden of the advertising falls on the retailer, who does most of it by bringing the books themselves to the notice of the prospective customer. He orders from the publisher on consignment as many copies of a book as he has interested customers for in his territory or among his clientele; he sends the books to them on approval, and very often sells them in this way.



This custom of sending out books on approval is deeply rooted in the German book trade, and constitutes a valuable asset, for, through it, with a relatively small cost, the prospective customer is reached and directly interested in the book. If one considers that there is usually a bookseller already in a town of about three thousand inhabitants, and that there are at least a thousand dealers who can be reached and interested, good for one or more copies of a new book, according to its value to the general public, some of the success of the German system can be accounted for.

Leipzig is the central town for the German book trade. Every bookseller and publisher, wherever in Germany he may be located, has his representative there. All the enclosures from all publishers go to the bookseller's representative, who collects them and ships them in bulk, charging a small fee for such service. The publisher, wherever he may be located in Germany, delivers his publications prepaid to the bookseller's agent in Leipzig, and all the unsold goods have to be returned to the publisher's agent at Leipzig, even if the publisher be located much farther away from that place. The risk involved for the retailer in many cases is the expense for transportation back and forth of books he receives on consignment from the publisher; he has no capital to invest in the outright purchase of the books.

supply his every want in the literary field. The American way, which is also practised to a large extent in other countries, is, of course, easy—simply to transmit an order for a periodical to the publishers, cash a small commission attached to it, and let the publisher and the United States mail do the rest during the year. The advertising value and the moral value of weekly or monthly intercourse with your customer is very important and evidently much underestimated in many countries. The German mail delivers period-

I would like to point out another trade custom in Germany which I consider of prime importance, as it helps to solve an important problem for the trade all over the world. The German bookseller sees that he is in constant touch with his customers. The approval shipments go a good way toward this end, but he has a few more methods. The one I would like to draw to your attention now is widely different from the American way of doing business. The German dealer supplies his customer with his periodical, be it a weekly, monthly or a special trade paper, and he supplies it to him every week or month, whenever it is issued, from his own house to his customer's door, so as to remind him ever so often that he is the man who is there to icals just as cheaply as the United States mail, and I do not think that in Germany more than ten per cent. of all periodical publications are delivered through the mail directly from the publishers. Of course, we have to take into consideration the fact that the centralization of the book and publishing trade in Leipzig, already referred to, and the cooperation of all parties concerned, make the service of periodicals through the booksellers a desirable, remunerative and important part of his business.

Subscription lists of another character are those recording annual publications, such as year books, and the names of customers who have taken previous volumes. Suppose one of your customers buys to-day a "Who's Who" from you; do you not think it is worth your while to take down his name carefully, and next year, when the new issue is announced notify him and try to get his order? Usually the customer, gratified by your attention and courtesy, will give you the order and perhaps enable you to get a better discount from the publisher by ordering a larger quantity than usual, the bulk of which is disposed of by advance orders. This and the "continuation lists," as they are called, are valuable assets to the stock in trade of the German retailer, and their careful handling shows the health of this business.

There is also another practice which, if properly started, would, I believe, bring great results in this country, and would help the American dealer to reach many customers now never reached or neglected. I refer to the practice of publishing, in parts, large or even moderate-sized works of general interest, subscribed to as a whole. This subscription business has nothing in common with the American subscription business, as it is usually understood here. It is simply a way of greatly widening the circle of readers who possess the book. Works like Nansen's "Farthest North," other travel books, books of historical character, have attained a large sale by being published in, let us say, fifty weekly or bi-weekly parts at ten cents each. For instance, the workingman who would never think of spending five dollars for a book, would gladly spend ten cents a week for the purchase of such a work, which he treasures very highly. One of the most pleasant recollections which I have carried away from the apprenticeship in our trade in a small manufacturing town in Germany is the intercourse which I had with the intelligent class of workingmen and small employees who came to our place regularly to get the parts of just such works as they came out. I do not think that the American publisher and bookseller lives up to his opportunity. The delivery of a complete book and the payment on the installment plan, which is just as much practiced abroad, does not entirely supplant the wide field which I have reference to.

Something much needed in this country, especially at this juncture, when everything tends to show that the public is swinging more from the light fiction to more serious reading, are the classified catalogues issued on the Continent in different countries, mainly by large jobbing houses, and sold at a nominal sum to the trade for free distribution to customers. These very carefully compiled lists of books in print on various subjects contain such books as are actually asked for, and enable the customer to get information about the books published in the line in which he is interested. I understand that this same information can also be gained here by consulting the American catalogue or other reference books; but you will admit that it hardly would be practical to give the American catalogue to a customer to take home, so that he may enlighten himself on the subject in which he is interested. There are other reasons besides the size and weight which prevent such a practice. I received yesterday from a dealer of the Hague, Mr. Nijhoff, a neat little catalogue, entitled "Selected List of Dutch Books Recommended to Libraries." It seems to me a perfect sample of the concise review which might be brought to the attention of customers here. The specialist in any branch of science or learning does not need the assistance of the bookseller to help to find the bibliographical status of a book. He is usually better able to do so through the special bibliography at his disposal, but the booklover at large, who wants to get information about a certain subject, is splendidly helped by these little catalogues, which bring excellent results.

For reasons stated before, I have dwelt on the details of some of the trade practices in Germany. These practices are by no means confined to Germany alone; other countries, which have a strongly organized retail trade, like Holland, Denmark, Sweden, make even a better showing. There is an absolute need for a widely scattered retail trade, and countries where this retail trade does not exist, or for special reasons has ceased to exist, suffer from the loss. We can draw a comparison between the conditions of our sister-republic France and the United States: both have had more real bookstores, but have drifted away from them. In France, with the exception of seventy or eighty towns, where there are bookstores worth the name, the book business is handled by the railroad bookstores or some kiosk on the main place of the town, both controlled by an agency, such as the American News Company, with ramifications throughout the country. There is the salesman who does sell what is sent to him, but without any initiative on his part. He has in many cases no knowledge of, or no interest in, his merchandise. Far be it from me to criticise his being there; he undoubtedly serves some purpose, but, on the other hand, the principle of a central agency, controlling the sale of literature throughout the country, is wrong. With the kind of a trust practice with which this is performed, it is very difficult for an individual real bookseller to start a new business, for those articles which would pay his current expenses are taken away from him through prohibitive competition.

The French publishers have taken a warning, however, and are proceeding to help in the re-establishment of really good booksellers all over their country. One of their chief mainstays is the creation of the booksellers' school in Paris, which was founded in 1898, and which, from the start, has proved a success. It is maintained at the expense of the Cercle de la Librairie, the Booksellers' and Publishers' Association of France. Their aims are analogous to ours. We have to encourage young men to follow our trade, and instruct them just as they do. In the school which we hope to establish as an outgrowth of these lectures, those experienced in our trade will give the newcomers, boys and girls, the benefit of their experience. They will show you the short-cut to success. It is "up to you" to listen and to make the best of it. What we want to show to those who come to our trade is the intimate working of it. To show how a book is made, the relative value of its different parts, so that you can talk intelligently even about the mechanical part of the book, not to speak of the literary value, which you have to get yourself. I remember once I listened to the conversation between an otherwise very succesful salesman and a customer. He talked of the book before him as printed on Japan paper, while it was in reality ordinary Dutch paper, brought forth an incredulous smile from the customer and missed his sale; so you see even those things should be learned. Further, you will be told of the principles underlying successful advertising, through print, letter and show window. You will be taught how to sell books, the psychological moments leading up to a sale; you will be taught the intelligent arrangement of stock, the proper handling of bibliographical helps, the mechanical handling of the book. The advanced classes of the schools, through discussions on topics relating to our trade, should become a clearing house, radiating valuable information for the whole trade.

There is an absolute necessity for schools of special training. They are opened everywhere. The big department store has its school to prepare its young help for its needs; the newspaperman has his school; the trades have their schools to impart knowledge, which, under present conditions of labor and of business, the employer, absorbed in the actual running of his business, can no longer give to his assistants.

No school, however, can give you information for every phase in your life. The Booksellers' School cannot give you the information for every phase of your trade life, but we will try to give you a foundation on which you yourselves can build. If it can institute in you the love for your trade, our work will not have been in vain.

BORDEN LIBRARY SALE TOTALS

PRINTS of old New York collected by Augustin Daly, playwright and theatrical manager, sold by his estate for $2,470 after his death in 1899, and since amplified by M. C. D. Borden, the cotton manufacturer and collector, were sold on February 19 at the Borden book sale for $20,100. The volumes contain 1,243 rare maps, original drawings, lithographs in colors, broadsides, deeds, documents and miscellany.

The entire library sale yielded $200,502.50. High expectations over the offering of the first four folio editions of Shakespeare suffered a chill when the announcement was made of the discovery that since the printing of the catalogue the work had been found to be imperfect, in that the title and accompanying verses appeared in it in fac-simile.

Walter T. Wallace, a private buyer, finally obtained the work at $7,800. Experts said that yesterday's number would have brought $25,000 had it been perfect.

Robert Louis Stevenson's works furnished a star attraction. The manuscript of his "Catriona," covering 214 pages of foolscap folio, was sold to Rosenbach & Co. for $4,400. First editions of his complete works, in eighty-five volumes, including original manuscripts and other matter, brought $1,100, his "College Papers" in original wrappers $2,500.

Swinburne's original manuscript of the tragedy "Chastelard" was bought by Charles Scribner's Sons for $2,000. George D. Smith obtained the original manuscript of Tennyson's "Nimue," renamed "Vivien," and part of the idyll of "Enid" for $3,200.

Thackeray first editions in seventy-three volumes went to Mr. Smith for $1,275, his unpublished verses with five original manuscripts and two drawings by Thackeray, of which only twenty-five copies were issued, for $1,650; a copy of "The Snob," Thackeray's publication at Cambridge, for $1,000; its successor, "The Gownsman," for $1,000, and his "Flore et Zephyr," with original pen and ink sketch, $1,000.

The Lexington Bookstore paid $3,000 for the five volumes of Izaak Walton's "The Compleat Angler," which were published in the lifetime of the author.

Milton's "Paradise Lost," first issue of the first edition, in fine order, with "John Milton" across the title page in large Italic capitals, was sold to Walter M. Hill for $1,425.

One bid of $2,500 made W. W. Seaman, agent, owner of the original autograph manuscript memoirs of Lord Horatio Nelson. An album of holograph letters, signed letters and signed documents, with examples from Lord Nelson, Lady Hamilton and others, brought $1,600.

REORGANIZATION OF McCALL COMPANY.

THE McCall Corporation, New York, with a capital of $6,750,000, has been organized and has taken over the stock of the McCall Company, publishers of McCall's Magazine and McCall's Quarterly Book of Fashions, and manufacturers of McCall's dress and embroidery patterns. Edward A. Simmons has been made president of the McCall Corporation. Mr. Simmons is president and owner of the Simmons-Boardman Publishing Company, publishers of The Railway Age-Gazette, American Engineer, and The Signal Engineer, and the "standard" railroad books.

James H. Ottley, formerly president of the McCall Company, and principal owner of its stock, will continue as a director in the McCall Corporation. Mr. Ottley bought the pattern business of James McCall in 1893. The business was begun in 1870, and McCall's Magazine was first published in 1891. In 1893 there were nine employees. During Mr. Ottley's ownership the business has grown so that there are now 893 employees. The company has leased quarters at 236 West Thirty-seventh street, New York City.

The McCall Company has been manufacturing about 2,000,000 patterns a month. The circulation of McCall's Magazine for 1912 was given as over a million a month and that of the Quarterly Book of Fashions 150,000 a month. The company issued about 2,250,000 dealers' catalogues and 35,000,000 monthly fashion sheets in 1912.

The directors of the McCall Corporation are Mr. Simmons, Mr. Ottley, Ray Morris, member of the banking firm of White, Weld & Co., New York; Howard Bayne, vice-president, Columbia-Knickerbocker Trust Company, New York, and Howard F. Whitney, of the banking firm of H. N. Whitney & Sons, New York. The executives in addition to Mr. Simmons are W. N. Newcomb, secretary, and A. John Rotheroe. C. D. Spalding will continue as advertising manager.

DINNER TO ALEXANDER WILLIAM DRAKE—"DEAN OF ART EDITORS."

"THE friends of Drake—as many as can get in" to quote the original announcement of the dinner, gathered at the Aldine Club on Tuesday evening, February 25, to honor Alexander William Drake, Art Editor of the Century, on his retirement from that post after forty years of service. Few men have been honored and loved more than Mr. Drake, and the gathering of this date, the culmination of a number of dinners which had been tendered to him by various organizations, was the best possible proof of that honor and love. F. Hopkinson Smith, as chairman of the dinner committee, presided as toastmaster; in his characteristic way, introducing and interspersing the speeches with his stories. Speeches were made by Theodore F. De Vinne, who gave an interesting account of the co-operation of Mr. Drake in meeting the printing difficulties connected with the art of illustration as revolutionized within the period of Mr. Drake's service; by Cass Gilbert, as representative of the Architectural League, who told of Mr. Drake's early encouragement of that organization; by Charles Dana Gibson, for the Society of Illustrators, who emphasized the perfect relations existing between Mr. Drake as art editor and the artists; by W. J. Hoggson, who gave a humorous account of the mysterious legends on the banners which decorated the walls and had been borne in procession into the dining room, and by Francis M. Crowninshield, who succeeds Mr. Drake as Art Editor of the Century. Herbert S. Houston, as Secretary of the Committee, read a few only of the sheaf of letters and telegrams of regret and good-will. Toward the close of the dinner, Mr. Smith made a felicitous speech of appreciation and presented to Mr. Drake a book in which the participants in the dinner had affixed their signatures to a letter of appreciation, and Mr. Drake made a simple and touching response. The Mendelssohn Glee Club furnished the music, including some characteristic skits written for the occasion. Another interesting feature was the presence of an old hand-press from the De Vinne establishment in which the veteran printer who had worked with Mr. Drake from the beginning, printed off during the evening, portraits of Mr. Drake, which were handed to each participant. The menu was of composite design, including contributions from nearly a score of artists, who thus testified their affection and admiration for Mr. Drake.

The guests were seated at tables arranged chiefly by club membership, no less than ten organizations participating through membership, including the Authors, Century, National Arts and Players Clubs, The Architectural League, the Society of Illustrators and others.

NEW STATISTICS ON NEWSPAPERS AND MAGAZINES.

THE gain in the number of newspapers printed in the United States, which last year was interrupted for the first time in thirty years, has now been resumed, according to the figures presented by N. W. Ayer & Co.'s American Newspaper Annual and Directory for 1913, which is just off the press.

Gains are shown by the dailies and weeklies, losses by the monthlies and quarterlies.

The new volume lists 24,381 newspapers and periodicals presenting 10 distinct items about each, including its circulation rating.

The number of daily newspapers now listed is 2,633 as against a total of 2,610 last year, an increase of 23.

The present number of weeklies is 17,285, a gain of 27.

The monthlies, which had all suffered a setback in 1911 and made a total gain last year of 77, this year again fell back with a net loss of 6.

To this loss New England contributed with a falling off of 9 monthly publications, New York with a falling off of 13, the Middle Atlantic States with a loss of 4, the Western States with a loss of 12 and the outlying territories with that of 9. This was partially offset by a gain of 16 in the Southern States, 31 in the Middle Western States, and 6 in the Pacific Slope States.

The Pacific Slope continues to show the most consistent gains in a majority of the classifications, but only slightly above that of the Western States.

The special classifications of publications in the Annual and Directory this year are 208, covering almost every field of human effort. Woman suffrage, for example now has 10 publications as against 8 last year; new thought has 15 as against 10 last year; automobiles and motors have 67 as against 65 last year, etc. Publications of more than 40 secret society orders are catalogued. Foreign language papers printed in 35 different tongues are described in 35 classifications of their own.

NOTES FROM PARIS.

(Special Correspondence to the London "Bookseller" and the "Publishers' Weekly.")

Does the young Frenchman of the present differ greatly from the adolescent Gaul of, say, twenty years ago? Does he evince a desire for action, a patriotic faith, a political realism, and various other qualities which were lacking in his immediate predecessors? According to the author—or authors, for there are said to be two—who, under the name of Agathon, have written "Les jeunes gens d'aujourd 'hui" (Plon-Nourrit), he does all this and more. He is, or at all events he is going to be, much more serious. He is going to devote his nights to the studies of the duties of citizenship, and his days to putting the said duties into practice.

It would seem that such a type does really exist, or, if it does not, it will have to be invented to satisfy a new literary fashion; for during the last few months many books on the same subject have appeared. Only a fortnight ago there was "Aux 'ecoutes de la France qui vient," by Gaston Riou (B. Grasset), which is "the passionate and lyrical confession of a young Frenchman, a type of the new generation, ardently religious and patriotic." In short, the book is more than "an enquiry or a confession; it is the 'credo' of a generation." Perhaps because I am too old—and "crabbed age and youth cannot live together"—I am out of touch with the youth of France and the present day. I have not noticed this phenomenon to any remarkable extent, but that it does exist there can be no doubt. Not only in France do we hear of it, but an esteemed correspondent in London "has got his eye on it," like Jacob Omnium (not my revered confrère but the gentleman whose "hoss away was rob"), and I have no doubt the Germans also are talking about the neigung of the French youth.

But, of course, young Frenchmen cannot acquire the requisite knowledge of their civic duties without instruction, which several writers are only too willing to supply. Amongst those latter we must give the foremost place to M. Raymond Poincaré, President-elect of the French Republic, who has written, "Ce qui demande la Cité" (Hachette). In this little pamphlet—which can be bought for a franc—he explains what are Communes, Departments, the Political Constitution, the Budget, Taxes &c., and what are the duties of the President, the Ministers, Senators, Deputies, and all the other wheels, cogs, and levers of the State machine. M. Emile Faguet is also endeavoring to teach the young idea how to shoot, and having already given us an "Initiation Philosophique," has followed it up with an "Initiation Littéraire" (Hachette), in which he reviews all literature from the very earliest specimens down to Dickens and Rénan. M. Roujon is going to add a volume of "Initiation Artistique," and M. Leroy-Beaulieu a companion volume on "Initiation financière." Possibly other well-known writers will initiate us into other sciences and arts.

A lucky hit was made by M. George Bonnamour, the author of "L'Apaisement" (B. Grasset), who has chosen for his subject the political career of M. Aristide Briand. As M. Briand became Prime Minister—vice M. Poincaré promoted—about a week after the book was published, it may be said to have come out opportunely. The war has also begun to produce its crop of literature. M. Stéphane Lauzanne, the editor of the Matin—who is, I believe, a relative of the late M. de Blowitz—represented his own journal at the bedside of "the sick man," and has described his experiences in "Au chevet de la Turquie" (Fayard), and we are promised shortly "Vers la Victoire" (Berger-Levrault), by Lieut. Wagner, the ubiquitous war correspondent of the Reichpost. He saw all the fighting—in fact, it might almost seem that the Bulgarian army was accustomed to "wait for the Wagner" before beginning to fight, if, by any rare chance he were absent.

"La desgrâce de Nicholas Machiavel," by Jean Dubreton (Mercure de France), is the story of the cunning statesman who "gave his name to our old Nick," and was hoist with his own petard. That searcher after mysteries, Dr. Cabanès, has continued his "Legendes et curiosités de l'Histoire (A. Michel); "Casanova à Paris," by Gaston Capon (Schmeit), gives us some further details of the life of that unsavoury rascal; the indefatigable M. Arthur Chuquet—who writes a new book every month or so—has produced a life of "General Dagobert" (Fontemoing)—an almost soldier of the Republic, who was killed while fighting against the Spaniards in 1794; and M. Goron, formerly head of the detective police, tells us about "Les Chaffeurs de l'an VIII." (Flammarion). These chauffeurs were bandits who used to enter houses, tie up the proprietor, and place him before his own kitchen fire, with his bare feet in close proximity to the bars, and allow him to toast till he stated where his money was hidden. They had a good many murders to answer for, but, taken on the whole, they were not as deadly as the modern sort.

Amongst forthcoming works, which we await with impatience, are "La Mort" by Maeterlinck (Fasquelle) and "Nord-Sud" (Calmann-Levy), a book of travels in England, America, Corsica, and Spitzbergen, by René Bazin, of the Academy. Anatole France—who is of the Academy, but not in it, for he has never been under its dome for some years past—has joined the ranks of the dramatists, and produced a two-act comedy, with the somewhat formidable title of "La Comédie de celui qui épousa une femme muette" (Calmann-Lévy. Whether it is an "actable" play I am unable to say, for all the first edition was subscribed for in advance.

In spite of a line in "Measure for Measure" ("Some say he is with the Emperor of Russia") allusions to "thick-skinned ice" and the "frosty Caucasus," and the fact that the King and his companions in "Love's Labor Lost" disguise themselves as Muscovites. I do not believe that Shakespeare ever went to Russia, and I therefore approached "Shakespeare en Russie," by A. Lirondelle (Hachette), with some mistrust. I was relieved to find that—as my friendly antagonist, M. Demblon, would say—it dwelt with "works not the man."

K. VOLTAIRE.

GERMAN LETTER.

(Special Correspondence to the Publishers' Weekly.)

STUTTGART, January 16, 1913.—The Christmas business is over. After all the complications and labors of December, the trade is at rest and now faces the old question: "Has the enormous outlay of work brought adequate profit?"

Unfortunately the economic conditions at the end of the past year were not favorable. The unrest in the Balkans, the threatening danger of war which would have affected Germany almost as seriously as Austria, had anything but a good influence on the purses of our book-buyers. A book at a dollar found a readier sale than one at four dollars and the buyer lingered talking war possibilities and probabilities with the salesman.

During the past year the booksellers of the City of Munich brought out an artistic colored poster reading, "The best Christmas present is a good book." It was quickly imitated in many German cities and during the Christmas shopping days these posters were seen in show windows and stores of all kinds. I know by personal observation that the results were very satisfactory. But the sales were chiefly of the cheaper books and therefore brought much work for small profit. I firmly believe though that when the political sky is clearer the same energy in advertising books will extend sales in far more profitable directions.

On the counters of the retail booksellers the new Christmas publications were piled mountain high. Provision had been made, as in former years, for every taste and interest. But again the book of which one might unhesitatingly say, "This is the book of the year," was missing. However, the general average quality advances steadily.

Romance and fiction, wide in appeal and cheap, lead as sellers. The new current novel by Walter von Bloem, Volk wider Volk ("Nation Against Nation"), (Grethlein & Cie., Liepzig, $1.50), which continues the work Das Eisene Jahr, ("The Iron Year") by the same author and publisher, 1911, is a war romance of the year 1870, powerful and slow-moving in style and portraying dismal tension and deep tragedy. French literature has perhaps something analogous in Zola's Le Debâcle. Happy military life is described to its full desserts in Du Schwert an Meine Linken ("Thou Sword in My Left Hand") by Rudolph Stratz, (Cotta, Stuttgart, $1.13). To friends of music is offered in Andolf Hans Bartsch's Das Schwammerl (Stackmann, Leipzig, $1.25), an entertaining book, which tells much about Franz Schubert, the Viennese composer. Into the times of the old German stories Schreckenback leads us in his book Um die Wartburg ("The Wartburg Country"), (Stackmann, Leipzig, $1.25), which shows the results of exhaustive research. The eagerly awaited book of the authoress, Enrica Ludovica, Handel-Magetti ("Stephana Schwerdtner"), (Kösel Kempten, $1.25), also appeared.

Good Christmas books that sold well were Charitas Bischoff's Bilde aus meinen Leben ("Pictures From My Life") (Grote, Berlin, $1.25), a truly German family book, and a significant and highly artistic collection of short stories, by Zahn, under the title Wenn das Leben Zerbricht ("When Life is Shattered"), (Deutsche Verlagsanstalt, Stuttgart, $1.13). Of informative works there were many excellent examples. Amundsen's book, Die Eroberung des Südpols ("The Conquest of the South Pole"), (J. F. Lehmann, Munich, $5.50), was most interesting. I note, by the way, that Cook's "My Conquest of the North Pole," (Janssen, Hamburg, $2.50), also found a ready sale. News of the Deutschen Zentral Africa Expedition, 1910-11, has been given by its leader, the Duke Friedrich Adolf of Mecklenburg, in his book, Vom Congo zum Nil und Niger (F. A. Brockhaus, Leipzig, $5). This book, which was written in a delightful way and contained much new matter, sold well. There was also in the province of description and travel a little well written book by Halitzer, America Heut u. Morgen ("America To-day and To-morrow"), (S. Fischer, Berlin, $1.50). It contains discursive descriptions of land and people gathered during an eight-months' journey through the United States and Canada. Special attention is given by the author to social and domestic conditions. A notable book of the Christmas market for friends of politics, Die Deutschen Erinnerungen ("German Reminiscences"), of the English diplomat, Whitman (Deutsche Verlagsanstalt, Stuttgart, $2.50), shows much knowledge of human nature. A great sensation was made by the first publication of the letters of Gustav Freytag, An Seine Braut und Gattin ("To His Bride and Wife"), (W. Borngräbes, Berlin, $2.00). This famous author who died in 1895 had very intimate relations with the Crown Prince Frederick, whose companion he was in 1870 at the battle of Sedan, and with others in influential circles. These relations are now in the letters very openly, and often also indiscreetly revealed, and in this fact is the importance of the book. Living, breathing pictures out of the great world of classic antiquity are brought us by the great grandson of Frederick Schiller, the Freiherr von Gleichen-Russwurm, in his book, Elegantiae (J. Hoffman, $2.50). Lovers of a sensitive portrayal of the older culture will find in this book many precious hours. To the last century in the time of Germany's rise to power, Pfleugk Hartung's Illustrierte Geschichte der Befreiungskriege ("Illustrated History of the War of Emancipation"), leads us back. The work has perhaps 300 pictures which are accompanied by an excellently worked up text. In this year, in which everyone in Germany is preparing for a worthy celebration, it will certainly be needed everywhere. That humor shall not be forgotten, I add Neue Buschalbum ("New Busch Book"), (Verlagsanstalt f. Literatur u. Kunst, Berlin, $5.00), which brings a great addition to the works of that dear humorist. Wilhelm Busch is in the great majority of German families a gladly seen and well-known guest, whose picture stories with verses make very welcome gifts.

This list includes the new books of the season, most talked of and most bought. Naturally every locality showed some variations, chiefly to be traced to local conditions and to special relations with special publishers.

I cannot close my report without dwelling upon the monumental gift presented to the entire German booktrade by the Kingdom of Saxony and the City of Liepzig. Upwards of $1,000,000 has been guaranteed for a complete library containing every publication of German literature beginning with January 1, 1913. The State and the City have also promised further generous help for this object.

ANOTHER NET-PRICE DECISION.

IF we may believe the reports in the daily press, the cause of net prices received an apparent judicial setback last week when Judge Ray, of the United States District Court, New York City, held that the jobber or dealer who consents to fixing prices as demanded by the patentee and manufacturer becomes a party to an illegal combination in restraint of trade.

The action was brought by the Waltham Watch Co. against Charles A. Keene, a New York jeweller, to restrain the defendant from selling for less than a fixed price watch movements patented, manufactured and sold by the Waltham Co. In sustaining the defendant's contention, Judge Ray declared that this case had no parallel in the Henry vs. Dick case, where the Supreme Court held that the patentee was entitled to make certain restrictions regarding the use of the machines he manufactured. In the latter case, he said, the patentee was to receive his reward partly from the use of the invention. The full text of the decision, which will probably be appealed from, is not yet at hand.

BIG DEPARTMENT STORE COMBINATION.

ON February 6, D. C. Nugent, president of the St. Louis department store—B. Nugent & Bro.—announced that department stores in several large cities, with a combined purchasing power of at least $75,000,000 annually, have organized the American Department Stores Corporation.

According to Printers' Ink, the department stores now comprising the organization, in addition to the Nugent store, the St. Louis representative, are Manheimer Bros., of St. Paul; L. H. Plaut, of Newark, N. J.; McKelvey & Co., of Youngstown, O.; R. H. White & Co., of Boston; Joseph Horne & Co., of Pittsburgh; and The Emporium, in San Francisco. Negotiations are now said to be under way for the admission of important department stores in New York and Chicago. Later, the admission of the largest stores in smaller cities will be taken up. The American Department Stores Corporation plans to cover the country.

J. B. Shea, secretary and treasurer of Joseph Horne & Co., of Pittsburgh, has been elected president of the corporation. The company will be nominally capitalized, and will be incorporated under the laws of New York.

The present headquarters of the company are in New York, under the management of Harry Edgerton Oliver. His offices are with the dry goods house of J. E. Manix Company; but it is expected, later, that buying headquarters will be maintained in all the principal distributing centers of the world.

The object of the organization is to consolidate the purchases and thereby get the lowest possible prices. The members plan to buy direct from mills or manufacturers.

TRADE ASSOCIATIONS.

AMERICAN BOOKSELLERS' ASSOCIATION.

THE annual banquet of the American Booksellers' Association will be held at the Hotel Astor on the evening of May 15, the price of the tickets to be $3.50. It has been decided as last year to admit ladies to all of the privileges of the evening. Further details of the banquet will be given later.

BOOKSELLERS' LEAGUE.

THE February session of the Booksellers' League School for Booksellers was held at the Liberal Club, New York City, last Tuesday at one o'clock. The speaker was Ernest Eisele, manager of the foreign department of Brentano's, who contrasted bookselling methods abroad, particularly in Germany, with those in use in this country. Mr. Eisele's address is reprinted elsewhere in this issue of the PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY.

BOSTON BOOKSELLERS' LEAGUE.

NOTICE of the formation, on a permanent basis, of the Boston Booksellers' League was given in last week's PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY. As the Booksellers' League organizations grow, league spirit spreads, for the league idea has already proved its enduring value to the book trade.

In this connection, it may be of interest to reprint the Constitution and By-laws of the newest sister in the league family. They are clear and simple, and may be suggestive to those contemplating the formation of booksellers' leagues in other centers.

CONSTITUTION.

NAME.

This association shall be known as the Boston Booksellers' League.

ARTICLE II.

OBJECT.

Its objects shall be to support and stimulate good feeling and good trade conditions among the retail booksellers of Boston.

ARTICLE III.

OFFICERS.

Its officers shall consist of an executive committee of three, each member serving three years and elected at the annual meeting, as provided by the by-laws. At the next annual meeting, June, 1913, this committee shall be elected for terms of one, two and three years, and thereafter one member shall be elected each year. The executive committee shall, after each annual meeting, select from its own membership a chairman, secretary and treasurer.

ARTICLE IV.

MEETINGS.

The League shall hold noon meetings on the second Wednesday of each month, omitting July, August and December. It shall hold its annual business meeting at the June meeting, and shall arrange at least one winter evening meeting for all the book trade.

All important business shall be discussed and voted on at these noon meetings. Five members shall be considered a quorum.

Special meetings must be called by the chairman upon request of any three members.

ARTICLE V.

MEMBERSHIP.

Any retail bookstore or book department, or individual connected with a retail bookstore, in Boston or vicinity may be invited to become connected with this League on vote of its present membership, and each store connected with the League may send not more than two representatives to the monthly meetings.

ARTICLE VI.

FINANCES.

The Financial year shall begin at the second Wednesday in June, and the fee then payable shall be $2 for each store represented.

BY-LAWS.

ARTICLE I.

DUTIES OF OFFICERS.

Sec. 1. The chairman shall preside at all meetings, and perform all other duties usually belonging to such office. In his absence, the secretary shall preside or the treasurer.

Sec. 2. The secretary shall keep record of all meetings, shall send out notices of meetings, and attend to all business relating to membership and documents.

Sec. 3. The treasurer shall collect, hold and pay out all moneys, subject to order of the League; shall keep a correct account of all moneys received and expended, and shall render an annual report.

Sec. 4. The members of the executive committee shall be elected by ballot at the annual meeting in June. A majority on the second ballot or succeeding ballot shall give election.

Sec. 5. Members of the executive committee shall not be eligible for consecutive terms.

AMENDMENTS.

This constitution and by-laws may be amended at any regular meeting of the League by a two-thirds vote of those present, provided a notice of the intended change has been given to all at least one week previous.

ARTICLE III.

SUSPENSION OF RULES.

Any provision of this constitution and by-laws which is capable of being temporarily laid aside may be suspended for not more than one meeting by unanimous consent.

POSTAL MATTERS.

FOR ONE-CENT POSTAGE.

A JOINT resolution, introduced in the House, February 26, by Representative McCoy, of New Jersey, would authorize the appointment of two Senators and two members of the House to investigate the possibility of a universal one-cent first-class postal rate, and would provide $25,000 to defray their expenses.

OBITUARY NOTES.

THE trade will be surprised and grieved to hear of the death of Mrs. Ellen Drake, the wife of Mr. H. R. Drake, the popular travelling man of The George H. Doran Company. Mrs. Drake was taken ill at her home in East Orange, N. J., on Sunday night, February 16, and passed away suddenly on the morning of Friday, February 21.

PAUL MARIE PIERRE THUREAU-DANGIN, perpetual Secretary of the French Academy, died at Paris on February 24, at the age of 76. He was in his earlier years a prolific author, dealing more especially with political and religious history. A treatise on Poland more than thirty years ago marked M. Thureau-Dangin's first appearance as an author. This was followed at intervals by his publication of historical essays, among them being "Royalists and Republicans," "Liberal Party Under the Restoration," and "Church and State Under the July Monarchy." His "History of the July Monarchy," for which he twice received the Gobert Prize, won him his place in the Academy. Another of his works was "La Renaissance Catholique en Angleterre au XIX. Siecle."

ONE of America's foremost musical critics, William Foster Apthorp, died of heart failure on Wednesday at Vevey, Switzerland, his home for some years. He was born on October 24, 1848, studied abroad and completed his education at Harvard. From 1872 to 1877 he had charge of the musical department of the Atlantic Monthly, of which at that time W. D. Howells was the editor. His first book, "Hector Berlioz," printed in 1879, contained selections of wise and witty pages from the autobiography, the literary essays and the letters of Berlioz. He became musical and dramatic critic of the Boston Transcript and during twenty years did much to elevate the tone of American criticism and to help form a taste for the best in music. Mr. Apthorp also undertook the herculean task of editing for the Scribners the "Cyclopedia of Music and Musicians," in three volumes. His publications include: "Autobiography and Musical Grotesques"; "Musicians and Music Lovers"; Jacques Damour and Other Stories (trans. from Zola)"; "By the Way"; "The Opera, Past and Present."

DR. BENJAMIN ELI SMITH, managing editor of the Century Dictionary, died on Monday at his home in New Rochelle after an illness of nearly a year. From the time that he became associated with the Century Company, in the early '80's, he was among the foremost of the men who edited the various dictionary publications of that concern. In 1881 he was associated with Prof. William B. Whitney of the Century Dictionary and after the latter's death he became the managing editor. He was editor in chief of the Century Cyclopedia of Names, (1894), the Century Atlas (1897), and the revision of the Century Dictionary (1911). When he was taken ill he was engaged on a school dictionary. In addition to this work he was widely known as a scholar and a translator. He received the degree of doctor of literature from Amherst College. Dr. Smith was born in Beirut, Syria, in 1857, son of Rev. Eli and Hetty S. Smith. He was graduated from Amherst in the class of '77 and was a member of Alpha Delta Phi. While a young man he tutored in Amherst. Afterward he studied in Leipsic and later he taught in Johns Hopkins University. He was a member of the Century Club and was at one time a fellow of the National Geographic Society. He also was a prime mover in the simplified spelling campaign. He married Miss Clara Shelton of Derby, Conn., who with one daughter, Miss Miriam Gray Smith, survives him. Dr. Smith's works, other than those mentioned above, include translations of Schwegler's "History of Philosophy" (1879); Cicero's "De Amicitia" (Laelius) (1897); Franklin's "Poor Richard's Almanac" (1898); Selections from Marcus Aurelius (1899), from Epictetus (1900), and from Pascal (1902).

PERSONAL NOTES.

EUGENE WALTER, the dramatist-author of "The Easiest Way" and other plays, is ill in St. Paul from ptomaine poisoning.

MR. M. G. NUSBAUM of the Nusbaum Book & Art Company, Norfolk, Virginia, who has been away for the past three months on account of illness has returned to his desk fully recovered.

JAMES BARNES, author of "Rifle and Caravan, or Two Boys in East Africa," and other well-known stories for boys, is planning a trip into the interior of Africa. He will have with him Mr. Cherry Kearton, of London, and will secure rare photographs and pictures for the cinematograph.

JOHN KENNETH TURNER, an American writer of Mexico City, was imprisoned on the 23d with the approval of Americans, for publishing in the Catholic daily paper El Pais, an article rabidly attacking the new Government and its motives. Tuesday brought news of his release.

PROF. LANDOLT of Strasburg, last Saturday performed a preliminary operation for cataract on Elizabeth, Queen of Roumania, best known as Carmen Sylva, under which pseudonym she published some eight or ten works. The Queen is now 69 years old and her general health is satisfactory.

THE man who makes a living by his poetry, Alfred Noyes of England, arrived in this country on Monday. While here Mr. Noyes will speak on such subjects as "Tennyson as opposed to Recent Thinkers," "Swinburne," "The Future of Poetry" and "The Great Green Table," a discussion of militarism. Mr. Noyes's published poems fill twelve volumes.

FREDERICK L. COLVER has resigned his connection with the New York Times to become business manager of Lippincott's Magazine and the other periodicals issued by Lippincott's. Mr. Colver was for many years prominently connected with the American Magazine and it predecessor, Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly. Mr. Colver organized the Periodical Publishers' Association and was for many years secretary of it.

MARY ROBERTS RINEHART, the first Pittsburgh novelist and author of "When a Man Marries," "Where There's a Will," etc., in a recent interview stated that she had cleared more than $100,000 on her novels and fully as much in royalties on her plays during the last few years. The smallest amount that one of her books brought, she said, was $1,200, while the greatest amount received in royalties for any one of her stories was $50,000. And then Mrs. Rinehart added, "Literature is more a business than a passion with me." —So one might judge!

G. K. CHESTERTON has severed his connection with the London Daily News and Leader, after many years. In the future he will contribute to a labor paper, called the Daily Herald, which recently made a pathetic appeal for $55,000 to enable it to go on, and, to the astonishment of everyone, got $40,000. Writing in the Herald, Mr. Chesterton explains his resignation thus: "I had no complaint against the editor, who had always shown me kindness, but the paper had come to stand for almost everything that I disagree with, and I thought that I had better resign before the next great measure of social reform made it illegal to go on strike."

LITERARY AND TRADE NOTES.

WINSTON CHURCHILL'S "The Inside of the Cup," long awaited, will be published this spring by the Macmillan Co.

MR. WILL LEVINGTON COMFORT'S new novel, "The Road of Living Men," will be published immediately by J. B. Lippincott Co.

SINGLE volume editions of the collected plays of Galsworthy and Strindberg are among the forthcoming Scribner publications.

"THE JUDGMENT HOUSE," Sir Gilbert Parker's novel, which has been appearing serially in Harper's Magazine, will be published in book form on March 19.

ADMIRAL MAHAN'S book on the naval tactics of the Revolutionary War, announced for early publication, has been postponed until autumn.

A TIMELY book, in view of the legislation recently fought out so fiercely in Washington —and defeated—is "The Immigrant Invasion," by Frank J. Warne, announced by Dodd, Mead & Co.

CAPT. B. GRANVILLE BAKER is bringing out, through Seeley & Service, the English publishers, "The Passing of the Turkish Empire in Europe," illustrated by sketches from his brush and pen.

CASSELL & COMPANY'S travellers were in part incorrectly stated in the Traveller's Number. E. W. Hall represents them in the East and Middle West, Laurens Maynard on the Pacific coast.

"THE SEA AND THE JUNGLE" is the well-chosen title of H. M. Tomlinson's story of a tramp steamer's voyage from Swansea to Brazil and up the Amazon for two thousand miles. E. P. Dutton & Co. are the publishers.

THE present American visit of the Abbey Company gives additional interest to Lady Gregory's "New Comedies," which the Putnams have in preparation. Two plays included in this collection are now being given by the Irish Players.

"THE RUSSIAN EMPIRE OF TO-DAY AND YESTERDAY," by Nevin O. Winter, is announced for early issue in L. C. Page & Co.'s travel series. "The Art of the Wallace Collection," by Henry C. Shelley, will appear in the Art Galleries of Europe Series.

"DEDICATED to the Philistine, the Average Man, those central classes who have painted the world's great pictures, written and acted its vast dramas,"—so runs the dedicatory note of Gerald Villiers-Stuart's "The White Shrine," just published by A. C. McClurg & Co.

PROFESSOR A. F. POLLARD, chosen to inaugurate the Goldwin Smith lectures at Cornell University, will speak on "The Place of Parliamentary Institutions in the Development of Civilization." The lectures, early this year, will be subsequently published in book form.

ETTA ANTHONY BAKER has written for publication in March "Miss Mystery" (Little, Brown & Co.), a romance woven around a young girl who has been deprived of her memory. Mrs. Baker is a New York author who has heretofore written for boys and girls.

RICHARD LE GALLIENNE'S "The Highway to Happiness," with a well designed cover in green and gold, and page decorations in great variety (some fourteen different designs in all) by Herbert Deland Williams, is a recent Morningside Press publication.

BY a recent New Hampshire decision (Bates-Street Shirt Co. vs. Place), if a shipment is made by a seller after an agreement as to a certain period of credit, the seller may not sue within that period, though the buyer refuse to accept the goods.

LUCIEN DORBON, publishers, of Paris, France, have published "Manuel Bibliographique des Sciences Psychiques ou Occultes," a three volume work on the occult sciences by Albert L. Caillet. Nearly 12,000 articles are included in the 2,000 or so pages. Researchers should find the work of great value.

BENZIGER BROTHERS have just published two new novels, "Their Choice", by Henrietta Dana Skinner, in which the heroine at once owns to being thirty-five years of age, and "The Mighty Friend," a modern romance of labor warfare, country life and love, by Pierre L'Ermite. This work was crowned by the French Academy.

"THE CASE OF JENNIE BRICE," is the latest novel by Mary Roberts Rinehart. She pictures the conditions that existed in Pittsburgh (her own city) during the memorable flood of 1907. The sudden, unaccountable disappearance of a prominent actress is the nucleus about which the story develops.

THE eugenists, it seems, are all wrong. Mr. G. K. Chesterton crosses swords with them in his new book, "The Evils of Eugenics," to be published shortly by Cassell. Although the book is apparently a serious attempt to disprove the theories of the new science, the attack will no doubt be made in lively Chestonian style.

BOOKPLATE lines distinctly appropriate in a bookstore, deserve the attention of dealers. The Prang Company furnish display cards containing samples of the sixteen Prang Bookplates, offered in a variety of designs, some of which are suitable for children. Bookplates are sold in sets of fifty, ribboned and boxed.

THE date of publication of the long announced concluding volume of the American edition of Romain Rolland's "Jean Christophe" has now been definitely set for March 1. Among the striking episodes are Jean Christophe fighting on a barricade in Paris, his flight for his life to Switzerland and an idyl there somewhat like Wagner's with Frau Wesendonck.

WOODROW WILSON'S forceful address, "The Free Life" will soon be issued in a new and attractive form by its publishers, the Thomas

Y. Crowell Company. The same house announces the publication of English editions of "A Valiant Woman," the anonymous work on educational problems which attracted wide attention last fall, and of "Old Four-Toes," Edwin L. Sabin's latest book for boys.

AMONG the new editions recently put on press by Frederick A. Stokes Company are the third of "Bobbie, General Manager," by Olive Higgins Prouty, before publication, the second of "Ranching for Sylvia" by Harold Bindloss, the second of "Miss Wealthy, Deputy Sheriff," by Elizabeth Neff, and the second of "The Life Mask" by the anonymous author of "To M. L. G.," before publication.

To those who have watched the Metropolitan Museum of Art grow year by year, those who know some departments so well that they at once recognize a new treasure, the "History of the Metropolitan Museum of Art" by Winifred E. Howe, will give the satisfaction of a collector tracing the growth of his collection. An introductory chapter gives the history of early institutions of art in New York. The volume is for sale at the Museum.

THE John C. Winston Co. list includes a novel by Madame Raoul Duval, "Written in the Sand," a romance of the Southern Sahara; "The Reluctant Lover," by Stephen McKenna; R. Austin Freedman's "The Mystery of 31, New Inn," a story of baffling crime; "Monarchs and Men," by Maximilian Harden, will shortly be issued; "Foreordained, with Other Stories," by Everhardt Armstrong, and "The Winston Cook Book," by Helen Cramp.

ACCORDING to newspaper report, a contract closed a week ago between Sears, Roebuck & Co. and Harper & Bros. of New York, calls for the publication by the former firm of 1,000,000 copies of "Ben Hur," by General Lew Wallace, a Harper copyright. The deal was announced by P. A. Murkland, department manager for the Chicago concern, who says that this contract is but the first of a series of such agreements which Sears, Roebuck & Co. mean to negotiate with publishers.

HOUGHTON MIFFLIN COMPANY announce the following publications for March 8: "The Candid Adventurer" by Anna Coleman Ladd; "Stephen March's Way" by Harry Herbert Knibbs; "Sinopah, the Indian Boy" by James Willard Schultz; "The Drift of Romanticism" by Paul Elmer More; "The Old Law and the New Order" by George W. Alger; "Common Diseases" by Dr. Woods Hutchinson; and "The Making of Modern England" by Gilbert Slater.

"THE WEAKER VESSEL" by E. F. Benson, shows how the "weaker" becomes the stronger in a final crisis. This, and Arthur B. Reeve's "The Poisoned Pen, Further Adventures of Craig Kennedy, Scientific Detective," are Dodd, Mead novels of the week. In non-fiction they publish "The Three Gifts of Life: a Girl's Responsibility for Race Progress," a new treatment of sex hygiene by Nellie M. Smith, and "Christianity and Commerce; a Study in Western Expansion" by Rev. Frank Ilsley Paradise, who treats of new methods of conducting missions.

M. A. DONOHUE & COMPANY, Chicago, announce that they have very materially strengthened their colored flexible and linen toy books; also their board lines of juvenile books. This house has also issued several new lines of standard 12mos and lines of general fiction, such as their new Abbot Series, Banner Library, etc., many with jacket Christy pictures for decorations. To the Boy Scout lines, Motorcycle Chums, Canoe and Campfire Series for boys, and several other of the important boys' and girls' series issued by this house, they will add many additional titles this year.

THE Reilly & Britton Company are asking American authors, known or unknown, with or without reputations, if they can write a $10,000 novel. In other words, to "secure a new story of such strength and striking originality that it will take rank among next season's best-sellers," they are offering a cash prize of that amount for the best novel manuscript submitted to them by August 31 next. No restrictions are placed upon contestants, and the novel chosen by the committee of judges—all well-known literary men—will be immediately published and extensively advertised. Full details of the contest, for what the Reilly & Britton Company believe to be the largest prize ever offered for a novel, may be had by writing them.

A CORRESPONDENT of the New York Times says that the volume of the school book business of the country is generally tremendously overvalued, some guesses running as high as $125,000,000. He points out that the United States Commissioner of Education states, in his 1911 report, Volume II., page 3, that the total expenditure for common schools in the year 1910 amounted to $426,250,434; text-books and other supplies, $6,264,240. This shows that text-books and supplies cost 1½ per cent. of the whole amount expended. He adds that it is agreed by all well-informed publishers that the total school book business of the country, including university and college books, is about $12,000,000.

AT a meeting of the Board of Directors of the American News Company held on January 30, Samuel S. Blood was elected president and treasurer to succeed Solomon W. Johnson, deceased, and Stephen Farrelly was elected vice-president in place of Mr. Blood. Mr. Blood has been a director of the American News Company and manager of The International News Company for nearly forty years. During that period the company has been the chief distributor in this country of the English, German and other foreign periodicals. He has devoted his life to the development of the news and periodical trade and is an acknowledged authority on its many phases.

PLEASANTLY gossipy notes about things literary are, as usual, a feature of the "Chronicle and Comment" department of the latest Bookman (March). These timely items concern Maurice Leblanc, Alfred Noyes, the Findlater sisters, Harry Leon Wilson, Elizabeth Robins, and other people of note. "Impressions of Leonard Merrick" (illustrated), a special article by Arthur Bartlett Maurice, should interest all the fortunate ones who have discovered that author, and all the unfortunate who have not. Other special articles are "A Note on Fiona McLeod," by Burton Bancroft; "Morse's Portrait of Bryant" (illustrated), by Annie Nathan Meyer; "Some French Women Writers of To-Day" (illustrated), by Marie Louise Fontaine; "The Grub Street Problem, Pt. 1," by Algernon Tassin; "Supreme Moments of Detective Fiction," by Burton Egbert Stevenson; "Unpublished Letters of Wilkie Collins," edited by William H. Hayne; and "The Publisher's Reader," by Calvin Winter. "Continuity of Structure in the Drama," by Clayton Hamilton, and "The New Flamboyance and Some Recent Novels," by Frederic Taber Cooper, are other features.

HODDER & STOUGHTON, of whom George H. Doran Company, are the American agents, announce an important prize novel contest most ingeniously contrived. It is open only to residents of the British Colonies, for the best novel, the scene of which is laid in their colony or dependency. The novel may picture the present-day conditions or past history of the country. They will divide the sum of £1,000 as follows: Class 1—Prize of £250 for the best novel submitted from a native or resident of the Dominion of Canada and Newfoundland; Class 2—Prize of £250 for the the best novel submitted from a native or resident of the Commonwealth of Australia and New Zealand; Class 3—Prize of £250 for the best novel submitted from a native or resident of the Empire of India; Class 4—Prize of £250 for the best novel submitted from a native or resident of British Africa and any other colony or dependency not included in Classes 1, 2, 3. The adjudicators are: For Canada, Sir Gilbert Parker; Australasia Charles Garvice, Esq.; India, A. E. W. Mason, Esq.; Africa, &c., Sir H. Rider Haggard. Full particulars as to conditions, etc., can be obtained on application.

LUCK!

THERE are still a lot of people who believe in luck.

Up here in one of the residence neighborhoods a bank-teller rented a vacant store room a couple of years ago and with his savings converted it into a moving picture show.

He decorated the place simply, but harmoniously; kept it clean, had a big plate mirror on which the pictures were projected rather than a wrinkled white curtain, employed a couple of boys for ushers of a variety that don't sass their mothers, and put in two big ventilating fans that kept the place from smelling like a wet dog in rainy weather and like the inside of an old clock in dry weather.

The ex-bank teller made money right from the start.

His prosperity was observed by a couple of young pirates from down town, the kind that think the way to get money is to steal it with their wits, either in money or opportunity, from those who have either produced the money or opportunity.

These two porch climbers with the efforts of others organized a company among their kind, rented a lot around the corner from the ex-teller's show and put up a rather pretentious moving picture theatre.

These two fellows were so proud of their new theatre that they became insolent.

They naturally selected help in their own image and likeness who reflected the insolent spirit of their employers to the patrons.

The two pirates ran a lot of low-browed films, economized in janitor service and boasted that they were going to run the other fellow out.

The pirate theatre lasted three months.

The porch climbers moved out and the ex-bank teller moved in.

Now, most everyone, including the pirates, says it was all luck.

As a matter of fact it was all a matter of service rather than luck.—Cottrell's Magazine.

Barclay, Edith Noël Daniell, [Mrs. Hubert Barclay.] A dream of blue roses. N. Y., Doran. c. '12. 4+342 p. D. $1.25 n.

Barbara Claudia Vincent grows up knowing nothing about her parents or family. At seven she was given over to the care of a fine old French couple, a sufficient sum for her maintenance being sent each year. When Père Joseph dies, Barbara and the Petite Mère find themselves in very straightened circumstances, and the girl, now of age, goes to London, to the lawyer, whose name was given to her guardians to claim the fortune she believes is hers. Disappointment is the only result of her visit and she is obliged to find work. How she does this, the people, some of them quaint, some of them merry, whom she meets, and her love for a fine man finish the story.

Barham, G. Basil. The development of the incandescent electric lamp; with 2 plates, 25 il. and 10 tables. N. Y., [Van Nostrand.] 8+198 p. O. $2 n.

Barrett, J: Panama Canal; what it is, what it means. Wash., D. C., Pan-Am. Union. c. 120 p. (3 p. bibl.) il. maps, O. $1 n.

Author is director general of the Pan American Union, formerly United States Minister to Panama at the beginning of the work on the canal in 1904-5. First part of book is descriptive; second considers such questions as What the canal means; The great Latin-American Pacific coast; Get ready for the Panama Canal; Conquest of the tropics. Last part of book is historical.

Benson, E: Frederic. The weaker vessel. N. Y., Dodd, Mead. c. '12. 458 p. D. $1.35 n.

A young girl in a country vicarage, the inmates of which are sketched with fidelity to life, has within her the latent seeds of genius, and of a noble character. In the course of time she escapes from her quiet nest into the outside world, and later she marries. Then comes her test. The husband, like her, is lovable, and in his way a genius; but he possesses one fatal defect of character—drunkenness, which warps his whole nature. As he sinks lower, his wife rises higher. And when the inevitable catastrophe comes she meets it with a noble and sunny fortitude, and from the wreck builds up at last an enduring happiness. By author of "Dodo," "The climber," etc.

Betham-Edwards, Matilda Barbara. In French-Africa; scenes and memories; il. by original and copyrighted photographs. Chic., McClurg. 9+324 p. O. $2.50 n.

France governs one thousand miles of North Africa, made up of burning sands, fertile valleys, magnificent mountains, and dotted over with Arab cities and hamlets. This is the country here described, with accounts of the hospitality of rich and poor, fellowship with French soldier and Arab peasant. There are anecdotes of famous persons and some adventures. Portions of book are from two of author's works, "A winter with the swallows," and "Through Spain to the Sahara," now out of print.

interest of pure literature in the mutual relation of man and society; and then to suggest the various answers essayed by thinkers and writers who may be regarded as preëminent in their several fields. He emphasizes two leading ideas: the gradual breaking down of purely national ideals in literature and consequent close interdependence of the literatures of Europe, and the conception that many of the problems of our day are not newly given us to solve but lost their first varnish years ago.

Chambers, Rob. W: The gay rebellion; il. by Edm. Frederick. N. Y., Appleton. c. 299 p. D. $1.30 n.
"Votes for women" is the groundwork on which this modern fantasy is based. The suffragettes, incensed at the men's continued obduracy, go on strike. A number of the most beautiful go off to the Adirondacks to a huge tract of land in the woods, where they live in caves, and sally forth to capture perfect specimens of masculinity, whom they net and drag back into their enclosure. Individual girls attempt to live up to these modern theories, but each in the end succumbs to the old order and falls in love.

Margaret Watson had been engaged to a teaching missionary whose work took him to China. Just as she was preparing to join him a cable came telling her he had been drowned. Later she learned he had lost his life saving that of his most rebellious pupil. All this is told in Margaret's diary, followed by letters written by the Chinese boy whose life was saved. These letters tell of his first contempt for Christian ideals, the gradual influence of his teacher, and his final conversion after the accident.

Hart, Jerome Alfr. Sardou and the Sardou plays. Phil., Lippincott. c. 403 p. por. D. $2.50 n.

Author says: "Nearly all of our knowledge of Sardou's family and childhood, we owe to the veteran dramatist himself—he confided to Adolphe Bisson, of Le Temps, some of his earliest recollections." In this thorough and exhaustive study of Sardou's life and works, Mr. Hart has gathered apparently all of the available data relative to the great dramatist. It is full of anecdotes, and tells of Sardou's youth and early struggles, his failures and eventually his great successes. Author has divided the book into three parts. The first is a biographical sketch; the second is made up of analyses of some two score of the Sardou plays—not critical but narrative analyses; and the third is devoted to the Sardou plays in the United States.

Woman as a parasite, a grafter, is novel's theme. Milly Ridge first works her father, then society. Always amiable and pretty, she manages to secure the devotion of a number of people, men and women. She marries, for love, an artist, but when he dies she has one moment of realizing that she had not made much of their life together and his nature was starved. After two years' struggle she marries again, this time a wealthy man, and flatters herself that she is doing it for her child's sake. Scenes are laid in Chicago, Europe and New York. Book is careful picture of a type of woman that always gets what she wants given her gladly, and always avoids looking the truth in the face.

Train the whole boy and not merely a part of him —this is author's slogan. To explain how to do it, to sketch a practical plan for the rounding out of the boy, placing the emphasis upon all rather than some of the forces necessary for such complete training, is the purpose of the volume. It is divided into five parts: 1st, Industrial training; 2d, Social training; 3d, Habit training; 4th, Vocational training; 5th, Service training. Index.

McKenna, Stephen. The reluctant lover. Phil., Winston. c. 341 p. O. $1.20 n.

Cyril Fitzroy, the most modern of modern young men, is the reluctant lover, whom an advanced young woman determines to capture, chiefly because he is such a difficult subject. The events take place in London ballrooms, smart bachelor flats, and exclusive country house, where the characters meet and discuss with more or less wit the complex affairs of the heart, going on among them. Most of the young men of the story are left in the end within hearing distance of wedding bells, including Cyril, though he does not fall in with the advanced girl's plan.

Paradise, Fk. Ilsley. Christianity and commerce; a study in western expansion. N. Y., Dodd, Mead. c. 20+171 p. D. $1 n.

The tremendous changes now going on in the East are already, and with the passage of time will in a more marked degree, produce a new type of eastern people. But these changes have brought Christianity face to face with a great and perplexing problem. The old methods of propagandism no longer avail to meet the conditions of the new life; something different must be devised; and the question before the churches is how they can best present to the new nations of the East the Christian ideals which underlie the civilization of the West. Book is a study of this problem of Christian missions and their relation to the great forces which are astir in eastern life.

By author of "The divine fire." Tells of fine youth, much given to exercise, who lives with his mother and tippling father, keeper of a small drug store in London. At the gymnasium Ranny Ransome meets a sweet, wholesome girl, Winny Dymond, and is on the point of telling her of his love when he comes in contact with her friend, Violet Usher. Ranny is captivated by her, never realizing that she is absolutely without moral sense and they are speedily married. Violet repents almost immediately. She hates her children, neglects her home, and finally runs away with another man. Winny stands by Ranny, and just as he has saved enough to pay for a divorce he has to use the money to bury his father. Again he saves, he and Winny are about to be happy, when Violet comes back.

Most momentous result of the Balkan War is the present tense situation in Europe, in which the interests of the Triple Alliance, composed of Germany, Austria and Italy, are arrayed against those of the Triple Entente, composed of England, France and Russia. Book discusses the situation with thoroughness. Beginning with an account of the great international movement known as Pan-Americanism, author considers the grounds for the existing jealousies between England and Germany, the relation of Russia, France, Italy and Austria to the affair, the actual effects of the war in the Balkans upon the balance of power in Europe, the relation of the United States to these new conditions in European diplomacy, and, finally, the close connection between the European imbroglio and the new nationalism that is appearing in the Orient.

Van Buren, Evelyn. Pippin; with il. by Reginald B. Birch. N. Y., Century Co. c. 316 p. D. $1.30 n.

First book of a new writer. Tale of the London streets, with a pretty stranded American actress one of the chief characters. Pippin has had to provide for a small brother and a shiftless father for three years. Picking pockets was the quickest and easiest way and she became expert. When Dandy, the valet of a playwright, falls in love with her, she realizes her dishonesty and tries to go straight. Her struggle and those of the young actress, whom she befriends, make an entertaining, sometimes pathetic, sometimes humorous story, which ends happily for everyone.

Van Kleeck, Mary. Women in the bookbinding trade; introd. by H: R. Seager. N. Y., [Charities Publication Com.] c. 20+270 p. pls. O. (Russell Sage Foundation pubs.) $1.50.

Studies the bookbinding trade, one of the most important trades for women in New York City. It is also in many ways typical, employing every grade of worker, from the skilled craftsmen, doing artistic binding by hand, to the machine operator, hand folder, the wrapper, and the errand girl. Competition in it, between outgoing hand processes and incoming machine processes, is incessant. In some branches the work is regular, in others very irregular. There is a union in the trade to which some of the women belong, but most of them are unorganized. There are to be other studies of women's trades in New York City following this. Index.

Etherea Vaughan is a successful novelist, having written stories of the sweet, pastoral description. She lives in Chelsea and her friends belong to London's Bohemia. An unscrupulous man gets a hold over the girl and insists on her writing a salacious novel, sharing the profits with him. The book appears under a nom de plume and then once more the man threatens exposure, unless Etherea writes another and also marries him. She is rescued by a fine Englishman, who has kept his ideals.

Wagner, Hermenegild. With the victorious Bulgarians; with an introd. by I. E. Gueshoff; with 55 il. and 6 maps. Bost., Houghton Mifflin. c. 12+273 p. O. $3 n.

Author was special correspondent to the Vienna Reichspost and London Daily Mail. He made a careful study of the conditions leading up to the war, and had unusual advantages for observing and reporting the actual operations. He managed to board a military train, spent five days before Adrianople, went to Stara Zagora, from there to Sofia, where he met the Bulgarian Prime Minister, and owing to his knowledge of the language learned much. Some of his jealous colleagues suggested that he was a Turkish spy, and the authorities of Stara Zagora were hunting for him while he was being entertained by the prime minister. Index.

Washburn, Stanley. Nogi; a man against the background of a great war. N. Y., Holt. c. 136 p. il. pors. D. $1 n.

Author was one of the newspaper correspondents who were with this Japanese general through most of the campaigns with Russia. Short sketch of Nogi's life and character, showing him to have been a combination of the old and new, a blending of the Samurai with all the primitive feudal traditions in his blood, and at the same time the highest science in modern war. Illustrated from photographs by author.

Whitman, Stephen French. The Isle of Life; a romance. N. Y., Scribner. c. 498 p. D. $1.35 n.

Central figure is a man who believes in living for himself alone. What he wants and cannot buy he takes. He wants a beautiful American girl, who dislikes and dreads him and sets sail for Italy to meet her fiancé. He takes her by leaping into the Mediterranean at night with her in his arms. They are picked up by a fishing-boat and carried to an island near Sicily. Here amid a semi-wild people he imprisons her in a deserted villa. From this point adventures come with a rush until the surprising denouement is reached.

THE CLIQUE

The Recognised Organ of the ANTIQUARIAN BOOK TRADE

This "unique paper" was founded for the benefit of the ANTIQUARIAN BOOK TRADE in 1890; and so marked has been its success that no bookseller of any standing can now afford to be without it.

The paper is issued every Saturday, and supplied to the Trade only. This unique feature renders it the ONLY paper published in Great Britain in which trade prices can be fearlessly advertised, and it is thus the BEST MEDIUM for wholesale houses who desire to appeal direct to the trade.

As a means of obtaining "BOOKS WANTED" its columns have long been recognised, not only here but abroad, as the MOST SUCCESSFUL which have ever been placed at the service of advertisers. It is received and read by every ANTIQUARIAN BOOKSELLER in the United Kingdom and the chief houses abroad.

SUBSCRIPTION, 8s. 8d. PER ANNUM. Subscriptions end at December 31st. Subscribers joining after January 1st should therefore deduct 2d. for each week that has passed. Any "live" bookseller can make the subscription out of the first number he receives.

SPECIMEN NUMBER GRATIS on receipt of trade card.

Our terms for advertisements are lower, notwithstanding that we stand FIRST among Antiquarian Book-trade organs, than those of any paper in the world.

THE CLIQUE is the official organ of the International Association of Antiquarian Booksellers.

Manuel Bibliographique

DES

Sciences Psychiques ou Occultes

PAR ALBERT-L. CAILLET, I. C.

Three volumes, royal 8vo, on two columns, aggregating almost 2000 pages, and describing nearly 12,000 articles.

This work should prove indispensable to all interested in Occult Sciences, for it aims at being the most comprehensive as yet compiled upon the subject.

It is the systematic classification of all scattered data of past centuries, as well as those of modern times, relating to this Science.

It is a vast Bibliographic Encyclopedia, including all the printed works relating to Psychic Science, of the three great Catalogues of the Marquess Stanislas OF GUAITA, of Count Alexis OUVAROFF and the Abbe Pierre Jacques SEPHER, reprinting as well all the matter quoted by Dr. A. DUREAU in his "Notes Bibliographiques sur le Magnétisme Animal."

This work is a sound documentary guide to facilitate the steps of reliable search regarding Occult Science.

Reference List of New Publications

Recorded in FEBRUARY, 1913

This Reference List enters the books recorded during the month under (1) author, in Clarendon type, anonymous books having Clarendon type for the first word; (2) title in Roman; (3) subject-heading in SMALL CAPS; (4) name of series in Italics.

A colon after initial designates the most usual given name, as: A: Augustus; B: Benjamin; C: Charles; D: David; E: Edward; F: Frederick; G: George; H: Henry; I: Isaac; J: John; L: Louis; N: Nicholas; P: Peter; R: Richard; S: Samuel; T: Thomas; W: William.

For books received sizes are given in CAPS, Q, O, D, etc., books not received sizes are given in Roman numerals 4°, 8°, 12°, etc. Prices are added except when not supplied by publisher or obtainable only on specific request. Where not specified the binding is cloth.

Those desiring to learn the entire publishing output of the month in any one field should look under one of the following MAIN HEADINGS:

PHILOSOPHY	MEDICINE	LITERATURE
RELIGION AND THEOLOGY	AGRICULTURE	POETRY
SOCIOLOGY	HOUSEHOLD ECONOMICS	DRAMA
LAW	BUSINESS	FICTION
EDUCATION	ENGINEERING, TECHNOLOGY	BIOGRAPHY
PHILOLOGY	FINE ARTS	GEOGRAPHY AND TRAVEL
SCIENCE	GAMES, SPORTS, AMUSEMENTS	HISTORY

Besides the titles listed under each of these headings cross reference is made from each to a limited number of cognate headings which collectively give all the new publications of the month in the given subject or group of subjects.

Inquirers looking for books on a specific topic should look under the general subject to which that topic belongs, i.e., GEOLOGY rather than SILURIAN PERIOD; MATHEMATICS rather than CALCULUS; ECONOMICS rather than WAGES. Books regarding specific Religious denominations, countries and persons, however, should still be sought for under their individual names.

POPULAR NEW NOVELS

By MIRIAM ALEXANDER

Author of "Beyond the Law"

"Miss Alexander tells her story with much skill and beauty. . . . She has created an ineffaceable, absolutely unartificial 'atmosphere'—the atmosphere of Ireland's weird, sombre romance and of France's dark, hopeless intrigues of a hundred and fifty years ago. . . . Sincere, conscientious and interesting."—Boston Evening Transcript. $1.35 net

Ashes and Sparks

By PERCY WHITE

"Cleverness itself. The way in which the author manages straightaway to satirize impartially and with a splendid moderation two extremes in modern social life—the hidebound worshipers of the adventurers and crazily fanatical 'reformers'—is a thing of joy and an artistic master-feat."—Chicago Inter-Ocean. $1.25 net

Who Laughs Last

Author of "In the Crucible," "The Moving Finger Writes," etc.

"A story of a man who unknowingly becomes a bigamist, believing his first wife—a cold and unloving person—dead. Miss Litchfield presents an arresting series of circumstances in a telling and convincing way, and at the same time points out an important moral truth. . . . WILL BE PRONOUNCED

The Year's Greatest Romance

Every lover of good fiction looks for the books which come all too seldom, the books in which there is the spirit of youth, of romance, of adventure and the warmth and color of real life. To all such readers we recommend this new novel. From the first scenes in China during the Boxer Rebellion until the end there follow swiftly scene after scene of splendid conception; told with a swing and go and a growing intensity of emotion that sweeps one along until the fine poetic climax.

THE HAPPY WARRIOR

By A. S. M. Hutchinson

Unquestionably the most popular of new novels, this remarkable story of contemporary English life is destined to be one of the really great books of the year 1913.

FREMONT RIDER in Publishers' Weekly says:
A wonderful novel of which it is only difficult to speak with moderation—so fresh in phrase and style, so searching in analysis, so fine in spirit.

FREDERIC T. COOPER in Bookman says:
A volume of such unalloyed delight.

TEMPLE SCOTT of Brentano's says:
One of those rare books the reading of which is a great occasion in life.

"A System that Earns Dividends"

"Your system certainly pays dividends," writes a firm believer in the system of bidding which Miss Irwin recommends. "For some months now I have won consistently. That of itself means nothing. But I have won with hands which have not averaged a bit better than those of my adversaries, and that does mean something. For instance, the other day I played six rubbers, of which I lost four and yet, without any advantage in partners, I was on the long side of the score on every rubber but one, and on that I lost only forty points. That, of course, was unusual, but it illustrates what can be done by letting the other fellow beat himself."

LOVERS of SKYE

An Idyllic Tale of Young Love

To the staid, old-fashioned folk of Skye, "spoon" had come to mean only a common carrier between table and mouth; courtships were as rare as hobble skirts; "love-marriages" as impossible as the Tango.

But one day, Hyppolite Paç, son of the most straight-laced family, kicked over the traces; fell in love with Eve O'Hara, a music teacher, and started a general revival of all the old, half-finished romances in the village.

Delicious and refreshing, this romance runs on as spontaneously as the beautiful river along the shores of which it develops.

The DAUGHTER of BRAHMA

The whole book is alert with the poetic pathos of the enmity and discord that exist between the two separate and forever separated interpretations of the universe, Oriental and Occidental. The greatness of the book consists not only in its literary ability but in its fearless character. Its scenes are vivid and its great denouement is one not to be easily erased from the memory.

"I hold every man a debtor to his profession, from the which, as men do of course seek to receive countenance and profit, so ought they of duty to endeavor themselves by way of amends to be a help and an ornament thereunto."—BACON.

KEEPING DEALERS POSTED ABOUT YOUR CONSUMER ADVERTISING.

SUCCESSFUL advertisers have discovered that it is no longer enough to advertise their goods to the consumer and to the dealer; to get full value from their expenditures for publicity they must, to a certain extent, advertise their advertising! And since large and experienced advertisers are now awake to the value of letting the trade know the consumer advertising they are doing, it may be worth while to instance some of the ways they are doing it.

Of course, the easiest and generally the most effective way, the one used, in fact, nine times out of ten, is one of announcements through the trade press. But this is the obvious method; some of the other announcement plans tried by big advertisers outside the book trade, and by some of the publishers themselves, may be more suggestive.

Nine times out of ten, if the trade press is not used, and often when it is, a form letter from the house outlines the campaign. This, with circular matter accompanying an announcement in the book trade papers, was the method used by a well-known New York firm in a campaign two years ago, exploiting a widely sold library of reprints. An enterprising Chicago publisher also bombards the bookseller with circular and statistical matter detailing the huge sums he is expending in his extensive consumer publicity. The trade papers are used by him rather to emphasize, in summary form, the data contained in the circulars. Another well-known house, specializing largely in fiction, tried the experiment, in the holiday season, two years ago, of page spreads in such mediums as the Saturday Evening Post and Collier's. Due notice of this experiment was given in the trade press, while circular reprints of the advertising used were mailed to the booksellers. A big New York house, on the other hand, noted for its extensive and efficient advertising of fiction, uses the trade papers almost exclusively to give news of its advertising campaigns on individual books.

Circular matter may range in cost and effectiveness from mere envelope-stuffers to complete portfolios, reproducing—in colors, if colors are to be used—the advertisements of the whole campaign. If the latter is to be extensive, these make splendid material for the traveling salesman, particularly if he is supplied in advance of data of the exact local circulation of all the various mediums used.

The traveling salesman, who is able to say to a specific bookseller, "We are going to use twenty-four mediums to advertise this book, of which eight circulate in your town to an aggregate of 43,000 copies. This local advertising, we estimate, will cost us $78. Here is the copy we shall use in this local exploitation"—that salesman who is able to say this to a prospective customer has his work made easy for him. The manufacturers of a widely exploited alarm-clock tip a little slip on all their correspondence, printed in imitation of the daily reminder pads. These slips run:

May
In Colliers.

etc. Another advertiser stamps a list of approaching advertisements, with a specially made rubber stamp, at the bottom of all his correspondence. These are current reminders of consumer advertising being run, rather than systematic exploitation of advertising campaigns being made. Similar is the case of the manufacturer of a new kind of paint to renovate tires. He ran a double-spread in a recent issue of the Saturday Evening Post. On the day it appeared the leading dealers who would or might carry it received a letter, with a coin attached, with which they were invited to buy a copy of the publication in question and read the advertisement!

To reproduce posters in miniature and send them to retailers is a common device of publishers, as it is with manufacturers in other trades. Several publishers send proofs of their current advertising to booksellers; and at least one paper in recent years, the Boston Herald, co-operated with advertisers for a time in this sort of distribution.

Make sure you have a story to tell the retailer, however, before you deluge him with matter; for booksellers, of all men, have large mails and, perforce, capacious wastebaskets. It is a waste of paper and postage to tell him about the routine advertising which every publisher has to do as a matter of course. But from the special campaign, especially the one in which you can show effective local co-operation with him individually, you, as an enterprising publisher, are entitled to get every atom of publicity value you can.

WHERE are on the whole the most successful book stores in the United States? Which is the best managed individual store? These two questions were asked recently at a booksellers' gathering in New York. The answers given were interesting, partly because of their practical unanimity. To the Pacific coast was awarded the general verdict; and, while in no sense underrating other excellently run and splendidly successful stores, both on the coast and in other parts of the country, the name C. C. Parker cropped up oftenest in the commendatory comments. Are the congratulations of the trade due Los Angeles in this respect? Certainly Philadelphia, Boston, Indianapolis, Portland, Me., Springfield, Mass., and a score of other cities have A1 bookstores.

THE Australian Bookfellow justly calls attention to the carelessness of many American dealers in sending mail thither with short postage—which means in Australia not only full postage due, but a penalty surcharge. Probably in some cases the two-cent letter rate to Great Britain and Canada has fostered an impression that other British colonies take a similar rate. The rate to Australia is, of course, five cents a half ounce for letters, two cents only for printed circular matter unsealed.

EARLY AMERICAN BOOK PRICES.

EARL L. BRADSHER.

A RECENT writer has estimated that the "twenty bookes" of Chaucer's Clerk of Oxford would "scarcely have failed to cost him the value of three average citizen's houses in a great town." Had, then, fortune smiled upon the Clerk he might have left a will to gratify more fully our curiosity about the relative cost of the items of a scholar's library some five and a quarter centuries ago, just as most of our knowledge concerning the very earliest prices of books in this country must now be gleaned from the wills of book-lovers. Unfortunately these records do not go back further than the early decades of the eighteenth century, and what Americans of the seventeenth century paid for their reading is a matter of conjecture. Indeed, the entire subject is one upon which we have all too little data. In addition to wills, the circulars of the publishers of the late eighteenth and the early nineteenth century can yet be met with occasionally. The accounts of at least one firm of the eighteenth century are yet extant. The earliest of our magazines were little given to book reviewing, and even when The Port Folio of Philadelphia. which was established in 1801, begins to print notices of new and forthcoming books, the prices are not given. Advertising in the newspapers is not a very popular method of reaching the public, and again, when it is indulged in, the prices are seldom stated.

A large number of old Virginia wills have been thoughtfully preserved for us by the Virginia Historical Society. One of the first which gives anything definite in regard to the cost of books is dated in 1710. Hancock Lee, of Northumberland County, in this year had books the inventory of which reads: "4 Common Prayer Books, 6d; 2 old Bibles, 4sh.: 1 small do., 3d.; 7 Whole Duty of Man, old, 2sh.; 1st, 2nd and 3d parts of Pilgrim's Progress, 3sh.; 12 old books, 15sh.; 7 do., 12sh.; 3 do., 3sh.; I book Writt by Purchase, 5sh.; 2 old 'histories,' 6sh.; Physic Dictionary, 10sh.; I book Intituled the disruption of Africa, 2sh. 6d; 3 old law books, 10sh.; 5 Physic books, £1; I Picture of Piety and the Touchstone wills and Testaments, 2sh. 6d."

This, by the way, seems to have been an average library of the Virginia book-lover of the middle class at this time and for a period up to the very end of the century, when the romantic school began to be read widely in this country. Reading, as any one must acknowledge who takes the time to examine many of these old Virginia wills, was much more widespread in the South during the colonial period than is generally believed. It was not, as is the popular impression, confined to the wealthier classes, but had permeated to all ranks. Perhaps the very nearness of the time to the original immigrant who might have brought books with him accounts in part for this.

Of course, the items given above would be of very little value to us if it were not possible to determine the purchasing power of the money of the period. It must be kept in mind also that many of these books are specifically listed as "old." The earliest wills usually took tobacco as a standard of value. For example, in 1713, "one great Book" is valued at fifty pounds of tobacco, a "Bible and a Prayer-book" at sixty pounds. What the size and the general make-up of these items were is a matter of mere conjecture.

When, however, a generation later, 1749, a three-volume set of Don Quixote is appraised at £1, 6 shillings, and four horses are listed at only an average of £1, 14 shillings, in 1746, we have some fair basis of comparison. In the same will as the horses "a great Bible" is given at 12 shillings. The probability is that the Bible was old and worn. If this may be premised, the value of a large Bible in Augusta County, Virginia, in 1746, was approximately that of a horse.

In 1751 the inventory of the estate of Sterling Clark, of Brunswick County, Virginia, showed among others the following books: 5 volumes of the Spectator at 12 shillings, 6 pence; 6 of Pope's Works, 12 shillings; 2 of The Guardian, 6 shillings; 2 of Addison's Works, 5 shillings; and Bailey's Dictionary, £1. The value of a book is determined, of course, in a considerable measure by its bindings. It was the practice to bind in boards in the late eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries; and unless it is definitely stated to the contrary, all volumes of ordinary size may be safely regarded as so bound. Bibles and quartos (and our forefathers were very fond of quartos) were, however, usually furnished with something more durable and attractive—leather or sheep.

Some prices in the Colony of Massachusetts, for the following year, 1752, will give us a standard of comparison. Beef was selling there at 2 2-5 pence per pound; corn, 4 shillings, four pence per bushel; while potatoes brought 2 shillings, 2 pence. A common day laborer received 2 shillings for a day's work. Were he, then, literarily inclined, he might get a second-hand copy of Addison's Works for the price of two and one-half days of labor.

The volume of business done by book dealers in the first half of the eighteenth century seems not to have been large enough to encourage them to very extensive advertising in the newspapers. And when they occasionally did advertise, the prospective buyer usually learned prices only after he had reached the shop. The New York Gazette, for 1753, however, contains a few short insertions, intercalated between notices of rewards for runaway slaves and apprentices. A small and somewhat inconspicuous advertisement in the issue of December 17, 1753, reads: "Just Published, Price 1s. The Grave. a Poem. Likewise, Price 18d. The Last Day, a Poem. By Dr. Young, author of Night Thoughts. To be sold by Garrat Noels, Bookseller in Dock Street, where may be had choice Keskatomas Nutts, at 6s. per Bushel, and 10d. the half Peck." The key, alas, of the prices here is lost, for "Keskatomas" nutts figures neither in dictionary (botanical or other), encyclopedia, nor gazetteer.

During the Civil War the business of printing and importing books suffered along with all other lines of business, so that there are few ways of judging prices during this period. Peace brought with it a new interest in things intellectual, however, for the conflict had been, to a marked degree, one of ideas. It was only natural, therefore, that records should begin to be more numerous. The New York Daily Advertiser for September 1, 1785, shows a fair proportion of space devoted to the advertising of books. New York was not the literary capital of the country at this period, and doubtless Boston and Philadelphia papers gave even more space to them. Samuel Campbell, of No. 41 Hanover Square (New York) calls attention to the fact that he has "just published Young's Night Thoughts, 5s.; Dryden's Original Poems and Translations, 2 vols.., 8s.; Butler's Hudibras—with plates, 5s.; Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress, 4s. 6d. N.B. A few pairs of excellent Cordovan boots, at 44 shillings per pair."

Doubtless none but the very rich wore imported Cordovan boots at this period, which are here worth twice as much as five volumes of classics, probably bound in boards, octavo. "The Theatre" (there seems to have been but one in New York in 1785, of importance enough to advertise at least) offered at the same time "a Comedy of Three Acts, a Prologue, a Hornpipe and a Comic Opera" (one performance) for the box 8s., pitt, 6s. and the gallery, 4s. In this year ordinary shoes are listed at 7 shillings per pair; flour, 2s. 6d. per pound; and potatoes at 1s. 4d per bushel.

In the last decade of the century prices can be accurately gauged by examining the accounts of a great Philadelphia publishing house, that of Mathew Carey. Only representative works of representative periods need be given. Carey bought of John Fellows, of New York, on April 12, 1794, among others, the following books:

2 Garick's Works	2 vols.	£1	8s.	od
2 Gill Blass	4 "	2	16	0
3 Butler's Hudibras		1	10	0
1 Johnson's Lives	4 "	2	16	0
1 Don Quixote	4 "	1	7	0

The trade usually received 1-3 off at this period and it is perfectly safe to assume that the amounts given here are wholesale prices. The consumer then paid for a copy of his classic Johnson's Lives, highly popular at this period, about £3.14.8. The bindings are not given, and in view of the high price (as much as for twice as many volumes of Gil Blas) and of its standing, it is fair to assume that the Lives were not bound in boards, as were the others. The prices of the remaining works are a mere matter of arithmetic. Carrying charges between New York and Philadelphia, being by water and fairly cheap, would not have added much to the retail price.

On November, 1794, an invoice of books belonging to Carey, on hand at his store in Petersburg, Virginia, runs for the price of familiar entries as follows:

Johnson's Poets	75 vols.	£28	2	6
Bartram's Travels			15	0
Cowper's Homer		1	8	2

Burke's Works		2	2	0
Addison	4 vols.	1	6	3
Rasselas and Dinarbas			5	0
Humphrey's Poems			6	0
Psalms of David			3	3
Burke on the French Revolution			7	6
Robinson Crusoe			1	3
Pamela			1	3
School for Scandal			1	3
Gulliver's Travels			4	0
Night Thoughts			4	9
Seneca's Morals			7	6

Seneca's Morals, here listed twice, gives a good idea of the difference in price of different bindings. The first entry is for some sort of leather, the second for boards. It may be that there were two different editions in America in 1794, but this is hardly probable. Malone's Shakespeare, in the edition of 1821, is in twenty-one volumes, but in a bill of books which Carey had bought of F. Childs and Company, of New York, on April 11th of this same year (1794), there is the entry "1 Shakespeare [edition not given], 8 vols., £2." This may be the same set. The bill just mentioned gives us other familiar items: Chesterfield's Letters, 4 volumes, £1 8s.: The Spectator, 8 volumes, £2; Roderick Random, 8 shillings; Smollet's Don Quixote, 4 volumes, £1 8s.; Watt's Sermons, 2 volumes, 15 shillings; Thompson's Seasons, 8vo, elegant plates, £2.

In this same year, one James Hardie had been paid 1 shilling, 6 pence for reading 1-2 sheet of Roderick Random. Leather was selling for 1s. 1-8d., paper for 1s. 2d. per quire, letter sheet at 7d. each. Labor ranged from 1s. 3-9d. a day for the unskilled to 5s. 5-6d. for the highly skilled. A Walt Whitman of the eighteenth century, then, might have driven nails and squared joists for two days before he could luxuriate in the adventures of Roderick Random. A "learned Blacksmith" like Elihu Burritt must needs make the sparks fly for some ten days or so before he could possess a set of the Spectator. True, let us not say that it required so much expenditure of human energy to be able to read in the America of the eighteenth century; for, even earlier in the century, Benjamin Franklin tells us that he read though almost penniless. But what Franklin was reading, if not in content was at least in form the waif and the outlaw of the printer's shop. The items before us are dignified examples of the best print and paper of the century, bound for wear.

A bill of expenses of a literary agent in the year of 1791 throws considerable light upon the expenses of a publishing house in those days and the price of travel relative to that of books. One Mr. I. H. L., departing from Philadelphia records, among others, the following expenses: "Ferry [crossing a ferry, two entries, average] 5d.; dinner on board [a ferry] 3s.; passage to Baltimore [from Norfolk] £3; passage from Baltimore [to Philadelphia] 16s. 3d.; dinner and supper, 5s.; bed, 1s.; breakfast, 1s. 10 1-2d." Had the agent been as anxious to read literature as he no doubt was to talk about it, he might have taken out of one of his "two boxes," while he was waiting for bedtime, a copy of the Beauties of Fielding, which, in the same year, cost his employer exactly as much as the entry here for dinner and supper. Or, if he were not religiously inclined, and prone to linger in the bar-room, he might have fortified himself by reading Baxter on the Soul, price (to the trade) 12 shillings. Other books he might have set in the "cofre" "at his beddes head" at night were Cato's Letters, 4 volumes, £1; Beauties of Pope, 6s.; Beauties of the Poets, 8s.; Cook's Voyages, 16s., and a Classical Dictionary, 7s.

The scholars, it might be noticed, had, in 1795, left unbought at Georgetown the following works: Mason on Self Knowledge, 5s. 7 1-2d.; Bachan's Domestic Medicine, 15s.; Perrin's Greek Grammar, 6s.; Peyton's Greek Grammar, 3s. 9d.; Priestly's Lectures, 15s.; Philosophical Translations, 3 vols., £3; Art of Drawing, 7s. 6d.; Map of Kentucky, 12s. 6d. The literary men of the neighborhood left unused the "500 quills at 15s." and the "3 sticks of seal-wax at 2s. 9d." had no chance to seal the "3 reams of paper at £3."

By 1799, one of the very first novels of American authorship was on the market. This novel, Arthur Mervyn, by the Philadelphian, Charles Brockden Brown, had what was for the time a rather large sale, at least in the South. The price, in a report from Richmond, Virginia, is given at $1. Reuben and Rachel, another celebrated novel of the period, was selling at the same: while The Hapless Orphan brought $1.50. The bookdealer of Richmond in that year, who might have advertised "produce taken in exchange," would have received two and one-half pounds of cotton for each of the first two of these books.

A catalogue published by American booksellers in 1804 throws considerable light upon prices in that year. The sizes and prices are given, but the binding is seldom specified. The Algerine Captive, another early American novel, two volumes, 12mo., sells at $1.50. Beattie's Minstrel has risen to the dignity of two editions—12mo., at $1.25, and "on vellum paper, hot pressed," at $2.00. Two editions of Burns' Poems appear at $1.00 and $1.50, while his complete Works, containing also a life, is issued in four volumes, 12mo., at $6.00. Mrs. Roche's Children of the Abbey, the most popular novel in America before Scott, is issued at both New York and Philadelphia, in each case in two volumes, 12mo, at $2.00. The honor of two editions is likewise accorded to Miss Burney's Camilla, which appears, at Boston and Philadelphia, in three volumes, 12mo., price $3.00. Her Cecilia is published at Boston in the same form and at the same price. Charlotte Temple has now become hackneyed enough to sell at 0.75. Three widely dissimilar works come out in four editions; Blair's Sermons ranges from three volumes 8°, at $7.00, to two volumes, 12mo, at $2.00, while Sanford and Merton, a tale for Children, and Murray's English Grammar are issued in form and price that should appeal to all. Walker's Critical Pronouncing Dictionary, 8°, costs $3.50. The cheapest dictionary published in this year is Elliot and Johnsons, "for schools," 12mo, 0.50—the value of half a yard of muslin, a yard of linen, a pair of low-priced shoes, or the wages of an agricultural laborer for half a day. Murray's Grammar, abridged, 18mo, would have cost one-fourth of a day's labor.

So far, only the final price of the finished book has been examined. One item in 1794 was, as noted above, Thomson's Seasons, with "elegant plates," a feature which noticeably increased the price. Just what the price paid to engravers in that year was, I am unable to say; but in 1802 a Philadelphia engraver contracted to engrave eight copper plates for a folio Bible, the subjects to be selected by the publisher, at $50 a plate. Engravers and printers were not very numerous in Philadelphia in those days, for when the first American Edition of the Encyclopedia Britannica, usually known as "Dobson's Encyclopedia," was published there in 1803, it was difficult to get enough of them to do the press work and to execute the six hundred copper plates which the work contained. The publication finally appeared, however, in twenty-four volumes, at $156 for boards and $187.50 for sheep binding. Moreover, in spite of perennial groans from Grub Street, some at least of the writers of the time were doing well financially. Caleb P. Wayne is said to have paid Marshall $60,000, in 1804, for the right of publishing his Life of Washington.

The difference in price between boards and sheep binding is given above. More light is thrown upon the subject by an old account book of 1815. In this year a Philadelphia publisher's bill runs, in part, for bindings in boards, "Ovid Delphini, 0.37 1-2; Mysteries of Udolpho, 0.20; Blackstone's Comments [one would have expected this to be bound in sheep] 0.23; Castle Rackrent, 0.16." A few entries under calf binding are "Tristram Shandy, 2 vols., $2.00; Ossian's Poems, 2 vols., $1.60; Arabian Nights, 4 vols., $2.80; Salmagundi, 2 vols., $1.40." To what a dreadful state financially our country was reduced in 1815 is well known, but nevertheless the book lover still continued to buy finely bound books, in appreciable quantities, although he might have hired a carpenter for two days for the price of the binding of his Tristram Shandy, or for a very little more he could have secured the services of a printer for the same length of time. Had he been fond of feeding the flesh rather than the intellect he could have secured twenty pound of poultry or fifty pounds of potatoes.

Toward the beginning of the nineteenth century, the publishers began to send out, to other publishers and dealers, hand-bills advertising their publications. These were usually some eight by ten inches in size, printed on fine paper on one side only, and executed in the best possible style typographically. Full descriptions are usually given. A good example is a circular which J. Cushing, of Baltimore, sent out in August, 1814. It read as follows: "Brooke's General Gazetteer Improved; or a New and Compendious Geographical Dictionary. . . . . [description]

"CONDITIONS OF PUBLICATION.

"It will be published in one neat pocket volume, of between 400 and 500 pages, printed on a beautiful Nonpareil type and fine vellum paper.

"The price to subscribers will be $1.75 in extra boards, and $2.00 neatly bound and lettered.

"To encourage an extensive circulation to this work, one copy will be given gratis to each person who will subscribe for six."

Neat spaces were always left at the bottom for names and addresses. The subscription feature was one that received a great deal of attention. Subscribers' names were ostentatiously inserted in the volumes. The patron dedicatee may have been rendered unpopular in the days of Doctor Johnson, but in obscure form the practice of dedicating to persons of influence still lingered.

One circular of more than ordinary interest is, "Circular of School and Children's Books Printed and Sold by Samuel Wood, No. 357 Pearl Street, New York," in 1814. Children of that day must have been largely of the sort that die young, if they could enjoy some of the items offered for their delectation. Epitaphs and Elegies, The Art of Flying [and we thought the science was new!] and The Mirror of Misery are offered (1-3 off to the trade) at 18 1-3 cents. The Bible History is 25 cents. Accidents of Human Life comes higher, in boards at 75 cents, while the juvenile mind can be held firm in the proper path by Limed Twigs to Catch Young Birds, at 31 1-4 cents. But one is curious to know how many precocious young Macaulays or Cowleys there were in New York in 1814 who would not have considered themselves badly used on Christmas morning to have found in their stocking Ursula, or the Insufficiency of Human Attainments, price 37 1-2 cents. However, the rest of the list is far less formidable.

A few more items from the circulars of the publishers will suffice. In 1814, a publisher of Brattleborough, Vermont (which, by the way, was early of some importance as a publishing center), offers to the trade among other books, The Scottish Chiefs, $2.50; Life of Franklin, $1.00; Rasselas and Dinarbas, $1.00, and Bunyan's Heart's Ease, $0.50. A New York dealer thinks it worth his while in the same year to send out a circular with only two entries: "Quarrels of Authors, 2 vols., 12mo. Price, $2.00, extra boards. Elements of the Philosophy of the Human Mind by Dugald Stewart, 2 vols., $4.50, boards."

The publishers of the period were issuing frequently what they called "chap books," popular literature on a cheap grade of paper, flimsily bound, and usually badly printed. A long invoice of 1814, filling seven foolscap pages, has of this class, The Deserted Village, $0.25; Sentimental Journey, $0.62 1-2; and Charlotte Temple, $0.62 1-2. In the same list is Ashley's Xenophon, $2.25; Boswell's Johnson, $9; Cook's Voyages, $2.50; Columbian Muse, $0.75; Curse of Kehama, $1.50; Dobson's Petrarch, $3.50; Life of Nelson, $1.00; Marshall's Washington, $17; Lay of the Last Minstrel, $0.87 1-2; Marmion, $1.20; Children of the Abbey, $2.50; Paul and Virginia, $1.00; Thaddeus of Warsaw, $2.00; The Vicar of Wakefield, $0.75 (perhaps a "chap book"); and Young's Night Thoughts, $1.00. The high price of The Children of the Abbey and of Thaddeus of Warsaw is due to the fact that they were published in probably two volumes, or perhaps even three, as was the custom early in the century.

What are the values here represented? Young's Night Thoughts was exactly equivalent to a day's wages of the average Massachusetts laborer. It could have been exchanged for five loaves of bread or twelve pounds of beef, or for one-third of a gallon of brandy. Had some careful mother wanted to give her young hopeful a copy of Epitaphs and Elegies, she must need have gone to market with about two dozen eggs, or the family cow must have yielded twenty quarts of milk.

Books, it seems safe to say, are one of the very few things that have shown a consistent decline in price in America within the last hundred years. Into the causes, mechanical and otherwise, it is not the intention of this article to enter. The phenomenon begins to make itself felt after the War of 1812, though it was very slow for some time. It is quite true that the actual number of dollars and cents asked decreases very slowly indeed, but the amount of human labor required as the purchasing price declines fairly rapidly.

One is apt to arrive at a wrong impression concerning the amount of reading done in America in early days, especially in the period when English romanticism was making itself strongly felt in this country, that is, in the beginning of the nineteenth century. The publications which have been noticed here were necessarily works with which the average reader is, in general, familiar. But along with all this literature which is more or less immortal, there was an increasing amount of the ephemeral, known only to the specialist—and sometimes not to him. This literature, cheap often in a double sense, formed a proportion that has generally been underestimated of the reading of the period.

But when all has been said, the fact remains beyond dispute that books of all classes, measured in terms of labor and its products, were, as has been shown, markedly higher than at present. They were, in fact, anywhere from two and one-half to three times more costly. That there was a large reading public, considering the population, can be proved beyond dispute. To the temper of progress and enlightenment of our Anglo-Saxon ancestors is due the sacrifices which they made for this spirit of knowledge.

THE BEST SELLERS OF 1912.

THE PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY'S CONSENSUS

THE following lists show the best sellers of 1912, in order of popularity as evidenced by sales, in each of the three classes: Fiction, Non-fiction and Juveniles.

This consensus for the year is based on the PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY monthly consensus for the twelve months complete, being a revision of the eleven months' statistics given in the Annual Summary Number.

"THE INDEPENDENT'S" SELECTION OF BOOKS FOR AN EDITOR'S LIBRARY.

THE Independent, in a recent issue, presents the following suggestive selection of books for an editor's reference library.

We have recently been asked several times, says the editor, what books are needed in the office of a newspaper or magazine or for a school of journalism. In answer to these requests we have prepared the following list, which includes some of the books most used in our office. The library of The Independent consists of about 3,000 volumes, constantly changing because whenever a book comes in for review that is better than anything we have on the subject we throw out the old one and put the new one on the shelf. We have given below only general works and such as are valuable for some special reason. The most valuable part of a journalist's library is the books, and especially the clippings, bearing upon the subjects in which he takes most interest. For the care and use of such collections of clippings see the article by Frederick C. Hicks, of Columbia University, on "Newspaper Libraries" in the Education Review of September, 1912.

ALFRED POLLARD'S "FINE BOOKS."*

The first thing one wants to say about "Fine Books" is that it is itself a fine book. It has the stately beauty of printing, which Mr. Pollard so praises in the achievement of William Morris, and it is enriched with many well-produced plates. The author concerns himself with telling you what constitutes a fine book, in a collector's sense, rather than primarily establishing your judgment as to the artistic content of the expression. He sets out to educate not your taste, but your connoisseurship. This he does by a comprehensive survey of the elements in a book of preciousness from the point of view of a fastidious collector; and, directing his attention chiefly to this class of readers, he often approaches the verge of a mere catalogue. Nevertheless, he covers a large canvas without leaving an impression of overmuch bareness of treatment or occasional perfunctoriness.

The general historical scheme might be more apparent. His style is unpretentious; indeed, that of a man so sure of his audience that he tries few of the arts of increasing the interest; and so sure of himself that he can afford to admit his shortcomings. "A competent historian," says he, "should have more to say on French illustrations; but the present writer has made no detailed study of them, and in the absence of any monograph to steal from, must record only his general impressions." Fine books are to be prized for their typographical beauty, their place in the history of printing, or their illustrations; and this scheme he sticks to closely and develops with relative completeness, as is to be seen from the following abstract.

As soon as a book becomes desirable for any other reason, says Mr. Pollard, its rarity becomes of paramount importance in determining its price; and if we go back far enough, age adds to the interest of a book. But age and rarity are of little or no interest in themselves. In the same way, strength and beauty of form are qualities to which the collector pays attention, but never makes them primary. The social or literary interest of a book is the first consideration. Books having historical association with the development of printing combine in a singular degree the charms of discovery with all sorts of literary, social and human side interests. The earliest books have beauty, but little literary interest, because they are mainly works of the preceding three centuries and subordinate the rather uninteresting author to an even more uninteresting person—the editor. But in compensation, these books furnish many interesting details of the printer and the presses.

Any book which illustrates the relations of the early printer to the scribe, the difficulty he experienced in his work and the expedients by which he surmounted it, can properly be called an incunabule. It took about a century for books to shake off the influence of manuscript and establish their own traditions. Blank spaces for headings, capitals and ornaments were often left for insertions by hand; title pages were at first unknown, merely because they had not been employed in the scripts; the extraordinary variety of founts in the early books was caused by the dependence of the printers on the styles of book-hand in vogue at the time and place, and because different styles were considered appropriate to different classes of books. But one of the good legacies of the manuscript days was putting the text handsomely on the page; the art of margins has been generally lost since the time of early printing. Books which bear upon their face, then, their position in the development of printing are called incunabula. The total number of English incunabula at present known is about 360, while those of Germany and Italy go high up into the thousands. Printing which had begun in Germany went down into Italy, and then up into France, the Netherlands and Holland, and did not reach England until it was beginning to pass into its commercial stage. In the fifteenth century, only three presses were there set up, against fifty in Germany, seventy in Italy, forty in France, twenty in the Netherlands and twenty-four in Spain. Indeed, provincial printing outside of Cambridge and Oxford was, except for an interval about the Commonwealth period, non-existent until the early years of the eighteenth century. The first books printed in America, in the seventeenth century, may claim the dignity of incunabula. But in Europe hundreds of books printed even so early as 1485 had ceased to show their connection with the development of printing.

Besides this typographical and historical interest, the first books printed in a country possess racial significance. With all extant literature to choose from, the printer felt that a particular book was likely to bring him the most profitable returns from his particular market. Thus it is interesting to note that the first large book in Germany was a Bible, in Italy a classic, in England a historical romance. The type and the appearance of the pages, too, help to illustrate national characteristics.

It was not until after nearly a century of printing that block-books (woodcut text) ceased to be produced for short and cheap books or for illustrated books with a small amount of text. This was because, when the blocks were once made, more work could be got out of them. Block-books possess, in addition to their historical interest, the attractions of popular literature and of their illustrations. It was so laborious to make them that the process was restricted to books likely to have a large sale, and thus the most famous ones are nearly all of a popular religious character. The majority of the illustrations in them are curious, rather than beautiful.

ever, by no means depend on quaintness for their charm. They present a harmony between print and paper and cut which has very rarely been attained since. In Germany, good work began early, because a school of woodcutters had grown up to supply the demand for playing cards and for the pictures of the saints. Edifying discourses fortunately attached themselves, in the early books, to subjects of every-day interest and amusement, and so could be illustrated. When there is little to be gained from a dull text, the artist may afford vivid and charming pictures of the social life of his day. The naïve craftsmanship of the earliest illustrated German books gradually entered into a region of conscious art. In Italy, book illustration began with the illuminator, and, in spite of skill and beauty, never quite attained the full possibilities of book illustration. Its best period came to an end when the sixteenth century was hardly under way. In England, the artistic spirit, so prominent in the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries, had died out in the fifteenth, to have a partial revival only in the last days of Elizabeth. Caxton seems to have realized that the English-made woodcuts for the "Canterbury Tales" were a failure. The pronounced discouragement of book illustration during the sixteenth century is not to be regretted, if one considers the quality of what English illustrations we have. All over Europe the case was becoming the same. Good paper and careful presswork were needed, and these were everywhere deteriorating; and bookbuyers did not care enough for woodcuts to make the expense worth while. Copper engravings were coming in, but in England even these were used sparingly for half a century; besides, the woodcuts were no longer as popular with the people. The pictures of incunabula had told their story simply, quickly and directly, even if rudely; the newer illustrations were conscious works of art, which demanded study. The artists, too, were reserving their better work for single designs or for copperplates. By the end of the century, woodcuts had gone entirely out of fashion. Later, the extraordinary perfection which the process block attained killed wood engraving, just as line engraving disappeared before the photogravure. Color processes now being rapidly perfected threaten to reduce all black-and-whites to unimportance. But, unfortunately, a hundred years hence very little will remain of all the illustrated work—much of it really beautiful—on account of the heavily loaded paper used. The collector of the future will have to be an expert on paper and leather also if he wishes to leave his collection behind him.

Printing, too, once it had passed its second stage, began to deteriorate. By 1500, men were thinking of new things, and with new literary ideals came new forms for books. Whereas they used to be made for reading stands, they were now made for the pocket and the saddlebag, and they became increasingly smaller and neater. But the change this expressed proved hostile to art. For the support of Church and State began to be withdrawn when it was seen that printing was making men think for themselves; and even scholars began to withhold their help and advice from the printers. Thus it was not long before printing sunk to the level of a mere craft, and a badly paid one at that. Not until the second decade of the eighteenth century was seen the first advance guard of the brilliant French school, and English printing ceased to exist as an art after the Restoration. That type and good presswork could make a book beautiful was lost sight of entirely. But the craftsmen, with their quite ordinary work, were, with various improvements, learning to be more workmanlike. And finally an artist came once more to the making of books. It may be said that no other printer, since printing began, has ever produced such artistic results as William Morris in 1891. His exquisite craftsmanship and his wonderful borders and capitals give a richness and dignity of effect which is the crowning achievement of the press.

CHANGES IN THE CENTURY COMPANY.

At a meeting of the trustees of the Century Company, March 3, William W. Ellsworth was elected president, to succeed the late Frank H. Scott, who died on November 25, 1912, after having held that office for some twenty years. Ira H. Brainerd was elected vice-president; Douglas Z. Doty, secretary; Josiah J. Hazen, assistant treasurer. Donald Scott continues treasurer of the company. George Inness, Jr., was elected a trustee, to serve with W. W. Ellsworth and Ira H. Brainerd.

Mr. Ellsworth was made secretary of the Century Company in 1881 and vice-president in 1911. George Inness, Jr., the well-known artist, is the son-in-law of the founder of the company, and has long been closely identified with its interests. Ira H. Brainerd, formerly connected with the business department of the house for many years, has been a trustee of the company for the past two years, having succeeded his father, Cephas Brainerd. Douglas Z. Doty is literary adviser to the Century Company, and Josiah J. Hazen is advertising manager of the Century.

The election of Mr. Ellsworth to the presidency gives formal recognition to thirty-five years of untiring and enthusiastic service in the interests of the company—years of untiring and enthusiastic service also in the interests of publishing as a fine and gracious art, with the personal relation of publisher and author one of permanent and valued friendship. A great grandson of Chief Justice Oliver Ellsworth and of the lexicographer, Noah Webster, a relative of Roswell Smith through both his mother's and his father's family, Mr. Ellsworth came to New York in 1878, at the age of 23, to find a warm welcome waiting for him in Roswell Smith's office, then the office of Scribner & Co., publishing Scribner's Monthly and St. Nicholas.

In 1881, there was a complete reorganization of the company, the firm of Charles Scribner's Sons withdrawing, the name was changed to the Century Company, and the name of the magazine founded by Roswell Smith and Dr. Holland to the Century. Mr. Ellsworth was made secretary of the new company; Frank H. Scott, treasurer; and Charles F. Chichester, assistant treasurer. On the death of Mr. Smith, in 1893, Mr. Scott succeeded to the presidency, continuing in that position until his death, November 25, 1912.

Through most of these thirty-five years, Mr. Ellsworth has given his time to the making and marketing of books, finding in this his keenest interest and pleasure. These are the phases of the publishing business, as he himself declares, which mean most to him—the reading and judging of books in manuscript, the treating with authors, the dignified, demand-stimulating publicity and advertising of the books when made. The devoted work of these years has been broken by wide travel in his own country and four trips abroad—one with George Inness, Jr., the painter, in 1884; a winter in Egypt in 1889-90, a short trip in the summer of 1910, and a long tour, which included northern Africa, a year ago.

But those who know Mr. Ellsworth as a publisher know only one side of him. His lectures on American history have brought him the friendship of large numbers who would never have known him through his work as a publisher or through his writings, often anonymous, in the Outlook and other magazines. The preparation of these lectures, the travel and the stimulus of their delivery, gave Mr. Ellsworth unfailing pleasure; and no man believes more strongly that every man, however absorbing the work of his days, should have another interest, work or play or fad, to help him to sane, vigorous, well-rounded, happy living.

FREDERIC G. MELCHER GOES TO W. K. STEWART & CO.

A FEW friends and business associates of Frederic G. Melcher tendered him a farewell dinner at the Hotel Bellevue, Boston, Wednesday evening, February 26. Mr. Melcher, who has been associated with Charles E. Lauriat & Company for the past fifteen years, and was the first president, and always the "live wire" of the Boston Booksellers' League, has accepted a responsible position with the well-known Indianapolis Book Store, W. K. Stewart & Co. Sol Abbott acted as toastmaster, and in a few well-chosen and happy remarks presented Mr. Melcher, on behalf of those present, with a walrus-skin traveling bag. The guest of the evening replied in his usual "enthusiasm-producing" manner. Other short speeches were made by W. B. Clarke, Frank L. Bickford, Hulings C. Brown, and others. The committee in charge were Sol Abbott, Charles E. Lauriat, Jr., and H. M. Caldwell. Others present were Amos L. Betts, Harry P. Burt, R. F. Fuller, Frank Dodd, G. S. Small, E. Allan Pitman, John R. Fraser, N. L. Tenny, Ralph T. Hale, William J. Schwartz, Frank G. Brown, Benjamin H. Ticknor, Jr., and William Weldon. Mr. Melcher, by his aggressive and optimistic remarks at the last two annual conventions of the Booksellers' Association, has made many friends throughout the book trade, all of whom will extend to him their good wishes, and, at the same time, congratulate W. K. Stewart & Co. in having secured so capable and energetic an associate.

ROTHERWAS LIBRARY AND EARL OF CRAWFORD'S COLLECTION TO BE AUCTIONED.

THE Rotherwas library will be sold at auction in London early in April. It consists chiefly of books of the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries in old calf and morocco bindings, and has apparently not been added to for many years. Many of the books are of American interest, such as Stedman's "American War," in two volumes; Weld's "North America," in two volumes; Charlevoix's "Paraguay," in six volumes, and Hennepin's "Voyages." There are choice editions of some French illustrated books of the eighteenth century, first editions of "Gulliver's Travels," Purcell's "Orpheus Britannicus," Dugdale's "Monasticon," and Johnson's "Pirates."

It is said that the Earl of Crawford's library at Haigh Hall, Wigan, is to be dispersed soon. It surpasses in value and extent any of the private libraries in England. An unconfirmed report says the library may become the property of the nation, but in the event of the collection being sold at auction, it is understood that the trustees of the Rylands Library, of Manchester, the British Museum and various university libraries will have an opportunity of acquiring such treasures as they may want. The strength of the collection lies in its examples of the early English and Italian printers, of works printed in Mexico and Lima on the languages of North and South America, of Reformation and Civil War tracts, of some 20,000 broadsides of all nations, of early English newspapers and those published in France during the Revolution, of Chinese books and historical French and German caricatures. It is announced that the late Earl bequeathed the philatelic section of his library to the nation. It will probably be housed in the British Museum, which will thus possess the greatest reference collection of stamps and the most nearly complete library of philatelic works in the world.

TRADE ASSOCIATIONS.

STATIONERS' BOARD OF TRADE DINNER.

THE Stationers' Board of Trade will hold their banquet on the evening of March 25, at the Plaza Hotel, New York. Tickets can be procured from H. M. Condit, secretary, 97-99 Nassau Street, Room 210, P. O. Box 615. The committee is composed of L. V. Blanchet, Eberhard Faber, William C. Horn, James H. Einstein, and Henry C. Bainbridge, ex-officio.

AMERICAN PUBLISHERS' ASSOCIATION.

THE annual meeting of the board of directors of the American Publishers' Association was held February 15. These officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, F. A. Stokes, first vice-president, Frank H. Dodd; second vice-president, Warren F. Gregory; treasurer, George H. Doran; secretary, Herbert S. Baker; manager, —— Tessaro.

The subjects of the postage book rate and proposed tariff changes on books were discussed, and an endeavor planned to learn more definitely the sentiment of the book publishers on these two points.

BOOKSELLERS' ASSOCIATION OF PHILADELPHIA.

THE annual meeting of the Booksellers' Association of Philadelphia was held at the Franklin Inn Club, Friday evening, February 21. The secretary's report showed that the past year had been very successful, and the treasurer reported a good balance on hand. Officers for the coming year were elected, as follows: President, Walter H. Cox, of John Wanamaker; vice-president, Robert W. Staton, of Staton Bros.; treasurer, William M. Bains; secretary, H. F. MacIlvaine, of H. W. Fisher & Co. Directors: Walter H. Lewis, of Strawbridge & Clothier; George Taylor, of Campion & Co.; and James W. LeGalloz, of George W. Jacobs Co. After the usual dinner, the association had the pleasure of listening to Dr. J. Berg Essenwein, editor of

PERSONAL NOTES.

ON March 1, Leroy Fairman will enter the productive department of the J. Walter Thompson Company, New York. Since December, 1909, he has been the editor of Advertising and Selling.

W. H. DEARDEN, who resigned as managing editor of Popular Mechanics on January 1, has been succeeded by Frank Parker Stockbridge, formerly of the New York American, subsequently of the Herald, and for two years city editor of the Globe.

S. F. McLEAN, formerly of New York, and at one time secretary of the Booksellers' League, has given up his connection with the Jones Book Store, Los Angeles, and purchased an alfalfa farm near Mesa, Ariz., which will be his address hereafter.

H. R. TABER, for the past ten years manager of the book department of the Harvard Co-operative Society, in Cambridge, has left the employ of the society, to assume a similar position with Wolcott's Book Shop, in Syracuse, N. Y. The department is at present in charge of H. C. Moriarty, who will be pleased to see all traveling men from the book houses.

FRANCES FORBES-ROBERTSON, sister of the distinguished English actor, Johnston Forbes-Robertson, is the author of "The White Hound," which appears on the Dodd, Mead spring list. The story tells of a girl who can feel things before other people see and hear them, daughter of a charmingly unworldly old scholar. The White Hound is the mystery.

LITERARY AND TRADE NOTES.

EDITH BARNARD DELANO'S "The Land of Content" is a recent Appleton publication.

ALICE BROWN'S delightful "Vanishing Points" has just been published by Macmillan.

FORTIETH STREET has not proved to be far enough uptown for The Fourth Estate. It announces its removal to Columbus Circle, Broadway and 59th Street.

THE first of a series of books on school efficiency, Prof. Ernest Carroll Moore's "How New York City Administers its Schools: A Constructive Study," is just published by the World Book Co.

AN indexing bureau, managed by M. Hull at 47 West 34th Street, New York, is prepared to arrange and catalogue private libraries, install card and filing systems and do indexing of all kinds.

WILL LEVINGTON COMFORT, strong as a painter of war and storm, has written a new colorful romance, opening in China during the Boxer rebellion. "The Road of Living Men" will be published by J. B. Lippincott Co. on March 14.

ONE of the most important technical books of the season, Albert I. Frye's "Civil Engineers' Pocketbook," will be published March 20 by D. Van Nostrand Co. The volume contains 1658 pages, 600 tables and 1200 illustrations, and is bound in flexible leather.

SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT & Co., of London, call attention to the efficiency of their department for handling periodicals. They supply all English publications direct, punctually and at the lowest trade prices. They also keep in stock European publications.

THE Century Co.'s March list includes a new Finerty book, "Finerty of the Sand-House," by Charles D. Stewart, author of "The Fugitive Blacksmith"; and "The Nest," the first book of short stories by Anne Douglas Sedgwick, whose "Tante" was one of the most talked-about books of 1912.

Now that we have our novels and philosophy, our sociology and eugenics all in play form, the problems of staging deserve interest. In his forthcoming "Towards a New Theatre" (Dutton), Gordon Craig has included reproductions of his unique scenic settings, with introduction and descriptive notes.

WHITCOMB & BARROWS, of Boston, have just given permission to the Perkins Institution for the Blind to put into Braille the "Chemistry of Cooking and Cleaning," by Richards and Elliott. This book was first issued by Mrs. Richards in 1881, and is still in its revised form one of the best sellers among the long list of Mrs. Richards' books.

HENRY HUGHES, author of "Golf for the Late Beginner," himself took up the game in middle life, and with his experience fresh upon him, explains the correct principles of golf in a way especially helpful to the late beginner. The illustrations are from photographs. McBride, Nast & Co. are the publishers.

How one romance started a romance renaissance in the prim little town of Skye is told in Frank Waller Allen's "The Lovers of Skye," published today by the Bobbs-Merrill Co. Old courtships, discontinued long before, were renewed, and the old rules of custom and convention, which did not countenance love affairs, bravely defied.

THE Princeton University Press recently published the Stafford Little lectures for 1912, "The Two Hague Conferences," by Joseph H. Choate, whose profound knowledge of international relations and experience in the rôle of mediator make him well qualified to explain the nature of the conferences, their procedure and their results.

FORREST HALSEY'S "The Stain," the story of a woman with an inherited mania for stealing, a young lawyer, her employer, who loves her, and "heartless Judge Harding," tool of the corporations, has just been published by F. G. Browne & Co. The book is the basis of the play of the same name, to be produced shortly in New York City.

JENNINGS & GRAHAM have just published a number of religious books, some of which would make appropriate Easter gifts: "From Christmas to Easter," by Lucy H. Heath; "The Humiliation of Christ," a group of sermons; "Linked Lives, and Other Sermons," by Alpheus B. Austin; and "A Cosmic View of Religion," by W. R. Halstead.

OWEN JOHNSON'S "The Sixty-first Second," based on a clever mystery story, and steeped in the atmosphere of Bohemian New York; and Edna Ferber's "Roast Beef, Medium," giving the career of the famous "Emma McChesney" from the time she goes into business until she becomes secretary of the company, are planned for March publication by Frederick A. Stokes Co.

IN commemoration of the Livingstone centenary, Charles Scribner's Sons will shortly publish a new, popular and inexpensive edition of Stanley's famous account of how he found the lost missionary in the heart of Africa. Stanley's "In Darkest Africa," which cannot be separated in the memory from "How I Found Livingstone," will also be published in a cheap edition by the Scribners.

authorities. It is well to say, therefore, at the outset, that it is written for those who dislike both, and who like to read straight on without having their attention distracted by footnotes or figures"—so writes Arthur E. Bostwick in the preface to his "The Different West," just published by A. C. McClurg & Co.

"WHATEVER are you going to do with it?" asked the friends of the shy bachelor, suddenly enriched by an immense fortune. How he puts this wealth to good use and gets the reward all worthy bachelors deserve, is told by a new humorist, Edward Burke, in "Bachelor's Buttons." This, and Beatrice Grimshaw's "Guinea Gold," a story of wild life in a wild place, are Moffat, Yard publications of the week.

IT is well to remember that commencement books and other school-day record books are often given a few months before the close of school, so that they may be in use before the end of the school term. Booksellers need to stock early in these lines. The Reilly & Britton Co. are calling attention to their "old favorites" and to three new sets of little gift books—the Friendship, Edgemont and Happy Days Series.

RAHEL VARNHAGEN, the Madame de Staël of Germany, and a feminist who anticipated many of the ideas of the progressive group of to-day, is the subject of a biography by Ellen Key, just published by the Putnams. Other recent Putnam publications are: "Montaigne's Essays," selected and edited by Adolphe Cohn; and a revised and enlarged edition of T. G. Bonney's "Volcanoes: Their Structure and Significance."

WILLIAM GANSON ROSE, author of "The Ginger Cure," "Putting Marshville on the Map," has written two new characteristic volumes, "Waking up Bolton" and "Success in Business," which Duffield & Co. publish. From the same house come "Veiled Women," a novel, by Marmaduke W. Pickthall; and "The Daughter of a Rebel," the romance of a Southern girl, who goes to New York to make her fortune, by G. Vere Tyler.

JOHN LANE Co., who have taken over from Stephen Swift & Co., of London, the works of Francis Grierson, will issue at an early date a new volume of essays by this author, under the title, "The Invincible Alliance, and Other Essays, Political, Social and Literary." This was originally announced under the title of "The New Era." John Lane has also taken over from the same publisher the Stephen Phillips' poetical play, "The King."

IN "The Economic Utilization of History," just published by the Yale University Press, Professor Farnam discusses modern methods of philanthropy. "Charity," he says, is a word out of date. Other recent publications from this press are R. W. Neeser's "A Landsman's Log," a picture of life on board a modern man-of-war; President Hadley's "Some Influences of Modern Philosophic Thought," and Rev. Charles S. Macfarland's "Christian Ministry and Social Order."

A NEW Hinds, Noble & Eldredge publication has the interesting title, "Scientific Management in Education." Its author, J. M. Rice, has already written "The Public School System of the United States," "The Rational Speller," and other works. Among the chapter headings are: "Obstacles to Rational Educational Reform," "Economy of Time in Teaching," "The Futility of the Spelling Grind," "Causes of Success and Failure in Arithmetic," "The Results of a Test in Language," "The Need of a New Basis in Education."

Two more books on the problems of our complex social life are just published by Ginn & Co.: "British Social Politics," an interesting study of the recent legislation concerning pensions, child welfare, workmen's compensation, the unemployed, housing and land problems, national insurance and kindred topics, by Carlton Hayes; and "Social Forces in Modern Literature," by Philo M. Buck, Jr., studying the intellectual and emotional revolution in France, Germany and England, and showing the mutual literary interdependence of these countries.

FROM the press of George H. Doran Co. come two volumes of short stories: Joseph Conrad's "'Twixt Land and Sea," three stirring tales of the eastern seas, and Lady Sybil Grant's "The Chequer Board," cosmopolitan love stories of the game of life. They also offer under the startling title "Starving America," Alfred W. McCann's exposure of the evils of manufactured foods, and Ethel S. Stevens' "My Sudan Year," an alluring picture of the little traveled headwaters of the Nile. To these they add the "Private Life of Henry Maitland," in which G. Morley Roberts describes, under a thin disguise, the curious and unhappy life of George Gissing.

LITTLE, BROWN & COMPANY'S miscellaneous spring publications include: "The Philippine Problem," by Frederick Chamberlin; "Engineers' Handbook on Patents," by William Macomber; "The Empire of India," by Sir J. Bamfylde Fuller (a new volume in the All Red British Empire Series); "Famous Speeches," second series, by Herbert Paul; "The Romance of the Men of Devon," by Francis Gribble; "A Sunny Life: The Biography of Samuel June Barrows," by Isabel C. Barrows; "The Prince Imperial," a biography of the son of Napoleon III., by Augustin Filon; two new volumes in the Continental Legal History Series, and a new book in The Modern Criminal Science Series.

DANA ESTES & Co. have in preparation an important work, entitled "Practical Sewing and Dressmaking." It is to be one of the most complete and comprehensive works ever written on this subject, and is the result of years of study and practical experience. In addition to containing a great deal of information and advice for the amateur, all given in the most simple language, admirably adapted to the beginner, it also furnishes full and complete information to persons desiring to establish themselves in the dressmaking business, with additional chapters on the cost of materials, labor, etc. It will have nearly one hundred illustrations, diagrams, plans, patterns, etc. An earlier publication from this house, W. Trafford Taunton's "The Night Dancer" will be issued on March 15.

A NEW publishing venture, with a novel programme, is found in the formation of the Tudor Society. This concern proposes to devote itself to the dissemination of altruistic literature. The president of the organization, which has offices at 120 East 14th Street, is Charles L. Stuart, the well-known encyclopedist and writer. "We are aiming to be altruistic in the character of the books which we shall publish," said Mr. Stuart, "as well as in our methods of publishing them. The subject matter of every book will be based upon some phase of this current doctrine of altruism. Our general literature will exhibit it, and our fiction will, by its wholesomeness and influence, relate to it. Furthermore, from the profits made from each publication will be set aside a certain amount, determined in each case by the success of the volume, for the advancement of philanthropic work and the betterment of humankind." The first book to be published is "The Great God Pan," described as "an all-time story," which is said to be a blending of ancient myth and modern thought. Other volumes are in preparation.

Adams, C: Fs. Seward and the Declaration of Paris; a forgotten diplomatic episode, April-August, 1861. Bost., Mass. Hist. Soc. 61 p. O. pap., 50 c.

Allen, Fk. Waller. The lovers of Skye; il. by W. B. King. Indianapols, Bobbs-Merrill. c. 261 p. D. $1 n.

To the staid, old-fashioned folk of Skye, "spoon" had come to mean only a common carrier between table and mouth; courtships were as rare as hobble skirts; "love-marriages," as impossible as the Tango. But one day Hyppolite Pac, son of the most straight-laced family, kicked over the traces, fell in love with Eve Mulligan, a music teacher, and started a general revival of all the old, half-finished romances in the little Ohio River village. Maids with ringlets and "old-beaux" with beards defied convention and sat together for tintypes and the village "priest" put snap into his wedding services.

Burke, E: Bachelors' buttons; the candid confessions of a shy bachelor. N. Y., Moffat, Yard. c. '12. 6+407 p. D. $1.30 n.

Imagine a bachelor who has been teaching school for many years and is approaching middle age, suddenly enriched beyond his wildest dreams. What will he do with his fortune? Everyone asks and a good many make suggestions, particularly his managing sister, Pansy, who goes beyond mere suggestions. He escapes from Pansy's thralldom and marries the right girl, but before that happens many things take place in the quiet English village where he lives.

Calthrop, Dion Clayton. St. Quin. N. Y., J: Lane. 8+295 p. D. $1.30, fixed.

Fantastic London love story. Shows how Edmund St. Quin married well, in the approved manner, at the right church, surrounded by the right people, all doing the right thing. His wife, Felicity, is very beautiful in the right way, has the right amount of income, knows as much of life as is good for her, and is the proper, recognized society product of two recognized society people—a French-American mother and a highly-bred Englishman. How the iron clutch of society and the still more effectual pull of romance influence these and the other characters of the book make the story.

By author of "A man's world." Yetta Rayefsky, a Russian Jew, comes to New York with her father, a dreamer, who believes that freedom is coming to everyone. When she is fifteen her father dies and Yetta goes to work in a sweatshop, giving all her wages to her aunt and worthless uncle. After four years of this, a sudden awakening to social consciousness comes to the girl. She takes part in a successful strike, and devotes herself to Socialism and the interests of industrial democracy. There are discussions of present-day problems in New York and much food for thought in the book. There is also told Yetta's love story.

Howe, Winifred E. A history of the Metropolitan Museum of Art; with a chapter on the early institutions of art in New York. N. Y., Metropolitan Museum of Art. c. 16+361 p. il. pls. O. bds., $2.50.

Introduction covers the early institutions of art in New York, 1787-1864, then follow chapters on the period of organization, 1869-1871; the Museum in the Dodworth Building, 1871-73; in the Douglas mansion, 1873-79; first years in Central Park, 1880-88; first addition to the building, 1888-94; continued extension, 1895-1905; presidency of J. Pierpont Morgan, 1905-12. List of officers of the museum from its founding is given. Index. The organizers' ambition was to raise $250,000, a sum $100,000 less than the present annual administrative expenses. In contrast to this modest beginning is the present achievement, for besides its priceless collections and extensive building, the museum has an endowment purchase fund of $10,000,000.

Hubbard, Arth, J:, M.D. The fate of empires; being an inquiry into the stability of civilization. N. Y., Longmans. 20+220 p. O. $2.10 n.

"The turning-point in past civilizations has been marked, again and again, by the appearance of Socialism coincidently with a failure of the birthrate. During the lifetime of the present generation these two phenomena have assumed a more and more prominent position among the races of white men, and it has been my object to show how critical position of any civilization is when it reaches the point at which they are simultaneously manifested. They are caused by the same force acting upon different materials, and the supersession of that by another and more powerful is indispensable to the stability of civilization."—Preface. Index.
